Killer Car Found

LONDON (UPI) — Scotland Yard officials this morning announced the car believed to have been used by the killers of three unarmed plainclothes detectives Friday has been found in London.

They said the car — described as a blue green Standard sedan converted into a van — was being examined by detectives.

No other information was immediately available.

Earlier, Scotland Yard issued an unprecedented appeal for London citizens to take to the streets and search for the 10-year-old station wagon in which the killers of the detectives escaped.

Even London's tightly organized underworld, shocked by the violation of the traditional gangster code against use of firearms, pledged assistance in the massive search which stretched throughout the British Isles.

Shocked Britons responded to the tragedy with a massive outpouring of sympathy and assistance for the families of the slain police.

A trust fund started with an anonymous donation of £100,000 ($280,000) grew rapidly. Other contributions were coming in swiftly.

At Liverpool, a schoolboy handed over his ten shillings ($1.40) pocket money for the fund and left without giving his name.

SPECIAL PLEA
Detective superintendent Robert Chitty of The Yard's murder squad gave a description of the getaway car and broadcast a special plea to citizens living in a 12-square-mile area of London around the murder scene.

He asked them to check the streets, garages and other likely hiding places for a "wishy-washy blue" vehicle converted from a panel truck to a station wagon.

Parade Marks Anniversary

Wall Prevented War East German Claim

BERLIN (Reuters) — Thousands of armed troops marched through the streets of East Berlin Saturday, marking the fifth anniversary of the building of the Berlin Wall, which Communist chief Walter Ulbricht declared had prevented war.

Berlin's most famous boulevard, Unter den Linden, where the Kaiser and Hitler paraded their armies, echoed with the tramp of marching militia, soldiers, and people's police.

The two-hour celebration was the first of its kind by East Germany since it surprised the world by starting to build the wall in the early hours of Aug. 13, 1961.

More than 5,000 factory militiamen wearing drab grey battle fatigues, carrying sub-machine-guns and sporting sprays of flowers in their belts led the march. They had stood guard at the border with the national people's army and police during the tense hours of the building of the wall.

LIFE-SAYER
Speaking from a stand near the state opera house, he said it had been necessary to build the wall in conjunction with the Soviet Union and other peoples democracies because West German imperialists had planned to destroy East Germany's political, economic and military achievements.

It had prevented "countless West Germans and West Berliners losing their lives... in a war," he said.

The Warsaw Pact countries agreed that a guard should be placed on the border and "the planned aggression could not take place — peace was secured."

Ulbricht made no mention of the 3,000,000 East Germans who fled to the West before the wall was built or the 58 killed by border guards while trying to cross it.

SHOW DENOUNCED
The western allied commanders in West Berlin Saturday denounced the military demonstration as a flagrant violation of four-power agreements.

West German officials in Bonn condemned Ulbricht's statement that the wall had been built to prevent war as "unsubstantiated cynicism." They said his speech was a miserable attempt to justify the wall.

Logging Firm Gatekeeper

VICTORIAN SLAIN NEAR COURTENAY

COURTENAY — The battered body of a logging company gatekeeper was found at 1 p.m. Saturday near Courtenay.

Police are combing Vancouver Island for a blood-stained slayer. The dead man is Dudley George Miller, 62, 1171 Clovelly, Victoria. He was a watchman on a Crown Zellerbach Logging Road.

IN SHACK
He was found dead in his watchman's shack in a lonely forest area on the access road to Mount Washington mine.

Police said there was no apparent motive for the brutal battering that ended Mr. Miller's life.

KNIFE, AXE
Reports indicated both knife and axe may have been used in the attack which bathed the shack in blood.

Police are searching for a man five foot nine inches tall, brown hair and eyes, may be wearing bloodied clothing.

RCMP know the name of their suspect.

A tracking dog is in the area. The dog was brought in from Nanaimo to assist in the search.

TWO MORE
In a broadcast unconfirmed here, Hanoi's Viet Nam news agency declared two more planes — a jet fighter and a reconnaissance craft — were shot down Saturday. A separate dispatch charged that U.S. planes bombed a Catholic hamlet and a dike section on the outskirts of Hanoi, "causing many losses in lives and property."

In Saigon, a mine exploded within the home of a South Vietnamese navy officer a block from Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's office. Police informants said they believed the officer was a Viet Cong agent and had touched off the blast accidentally.

The Jerk, Mini-Skirts Blasted in Tunisia

TUNIS (UPI) — Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba has ordered a crack-down on the Jerk and the mini-skirts because he says they "offend the dignity of Tunisian women."

A presidential order has closed the capital's most swinging nightclub, Bey's Palladium. Among those who patronized the club were several of Bourguiba's ministers.

At the same time Bourguiba attacked bachelorhood, calling on all Tunisians of both sexes "to do their duty to their country, which consists of getting married by the age of 25."

Bennett Hint

Cabinet Post All Settled?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Sun says Premier Bennett has "hinted strongly" that Dr. Lawrence E. Ranta, medical director of the Vancouver General Hospital, will succeed Health Minister Eric Martin, who is retiring due to poor health.

The Sun, in a dispatch from Cranbrook where the premier officiated at sod-turning ceremonies for a new $4,500,000 hospital, said that when the premier was asked about rumors that Dr. Ranta would seek the Social Credit nomination in one of the six Vancouver ridings, he replied: "I think he will run, perhaps in Point Grey."

The premier was quoted as saying: "He (Ranta) is not only a very experienced medical man but is also experienced in administration of perhaps the biggest hospital in Canada."

Longshoremen Win Raise

Dockyard Peace Seems Assured

VANCOUVER (CP) — Threat of a longshore strike which could have tied up shipping at all of British Columbia's seven major ports appeared to have vanished Saturday.

The International Longshoremen's Union (ILU) and the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association announced a new agreement—subject to approval of their respective memberships — giving the province's 3,400 longshoremen substantially what they asked for.

BRIDGES HELPS
The new three-year contract, effective from Aug. 1, 1966 and jointly announced by union and employer representatives, gives the men a 50-cent-an-hour increase on a base rate of $3.38 an hour plus a number of fringe benefits, including increased pensions.

Association spokesmen estimated the fringe benefits were worth about another 16 cents an hour.

The union, aided in its negotiations by Harry Bridges, international president who came up from his San Francisco headquarters a week ago, had asked for 50 cents an hour, plus a number of fringe benefits.

Talks End, Machinists Blamed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. labor secretary W. Wirtz bluntly blamed striking machinists Saturday night for failure to settle the 37-day-old airline strike.

Mr. Wirtz issued a strong statement after P. L. Siemiller, president of the striking International Association of Machinists, stormed out of a joint meeting with airline negotiators, which had been called by Mr. Wirtz.

The secretary said a tentative agreement had been reached earlier Saturday by the negotiators but "when we brought two representatives of each party together to complete the details of the agreement the union rejected the terms."

Watts Finds Peace

They're Dancing in Charcoal Alley

By RAY ROGERS
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Instead of gunfire there was music, instead of swearing there was laughter, and instead of terror there was gaiety Saturday at the first annual Watts Summer Festival.

A six-block stretch which was, a year ago, at the vortex of the bloodiest race riot in United States history became a scene of children on carnival rides and adults examining paintings.

The strip is along 103rd Street from Compton to Wilmington Street, known last summer as Charcoal Alley. There, on lots cleared of the rubble resulting from the arson of last August, tents have been erected.

Thousands of persons, both Negro and white, were roaming the area in balmy weather. Much of their attention was directed toward the Afro-American, West Indian and modern paintings, sculpture and handicrafts.

Among the early arrivals on opening night was Mayor Samuel Yorty. "Isn't this beautiful," he commented while strolling along. "Everybody loves everybody else."

He paused to shake hands with a Negro man. "I was wondering when you were coming down here," said the man.

"I come down here all the time," the mayor replied. "You just don't know about it."

Another visitor to the festival is James Meredith, the first Negro ever to graduate from the University of Mississippi. Meredith is in town to raise money at a rally Sunday for the impoverished in Mississippi.

All six blocks have been sealed off to traffic. On one of the blocks there was dancing in the street, to the music of a jukebox.

The kids, of course, gravitated to a lot where wax

Killer Car Found in London wagon with a defective exhaust which, he said, "should stick out like a sore thumb."

"I must find it," Chitty said. "It must have been used prior to the killing. I want to know when, why and where it was garaged. A car just doesn't vanish into a row of streets without somebody seeing something."

At least 18,000 policemen — some carrying weapons for the first time in their professional careers — fanned across London in search of clues.

They were prepared to shoot it out with their quarry. Many carried rifles or tear gas. There was one report that the army would be called in.

MINE DETECTOR

The only immediate indication of such help was the arrival of an army mine detector team to the murder scene, hard by London's gaunt Wormwood

Scrubs prison, to seek spent bullets and other clues.

The slain detectives were shot with just three bullets before horrified children who were playing cricket across the way.

Two of the plainclothesmen had left their patrol car. Another was still in the driver's seat. One of the two who left the car had also been run over. The killers reportedly escaped in a light blue van. Roadblocks were set up in northern England and Wales after a man, driving a car which answered the description of the getaway vehicle, tried to withdraw money from a Flintshire post office.

NOT ARMED

London's gangland was said to be anxious to help catch the killers. "Professional" criminals here, knowing their sentence would be extremely harsh if they are caught carrying a gun, usually are not armed. And with 18,000 angry policemen on the prowl, there were obviously fears that other crimes would be discovered.

Except on special occasions, British policemen also go unarmed, apart from a pocket-sized truncheon. Until the abolition of capital punishment last year, however, anyone murdering a policeman faced a death sentence. Friday's crime prompted calls for a return of hanging.

PRISON THEORY

There were no definite clues as to why the detectives stopped to question the men in the blue car. There was speculation the killers or killer may have been connected with a prison break-out.

One of the most important inmates in the Wormwood Scrubs jail is believed to be a man serving time for his part in a fight between two gangs fighting for the plum of "protecting" burgeoning gambling clubs here. None of the men connected with the "Great Train Robbery," who have been involved in previous escape bids, are held in Wormwood Scrubs.

"Only three men know why the car was stopped, and they are dead," a grim-faced Scotland Yard detective said.

The slaying was the worst experienced by London police since the famed "Siege of Sidney Street" in December, 1910, when five officers were shot, three of them fatally, in a battle with anarchists.

The rest of Saturday's schedule included:

A jazz concert at the Jordan High athletic field; a Miss Watts beauty pageant and at midnight a Music After Hours program.

The highlight of today's activities will be a parade for 30 blocks through Watts.

The grand marshal will be Sargent Shriver, director of the war on poverty. The scene Saturday was in startling contrast to that a year ago, when the cry was "Burn, Baby, Burn!"

One of the tents featured an exhibit urging dropouts to go back to school. On a table outside the tent stood a sign, "Learn, Baby, learn!"

Check with Dermatologist If Losing Hair

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: I am a woman of 46 and have a problem of hair loss. A physical checkup shows my condition to be normal. In view of this what are the possibilities of hair transplanting?—MRS. B.E.

Transplanting of hair has been done, apparently successfully, but it is quite a new technique. It is painstaking and expensive. Obviously it is also dependent on having enough hair on some areas for transplanting.

For those reasons I am not disposed to recommend that people try it without carefully balancing all the factors. There is one further and very important thing for you to do. Have a dermatologist examine your scalp. For example, if there is some skin ailment or infection which is causing hair loss, such loss can continue despite the effort and cost of transplanting.

There are different reasons for loss of hair. It is not unusual for women to notice some thinning as they reach 40. Or the loss may be a matter of the hair being brittle and breaking off rather than instability of the follicles to grow hair.

Has your thyroid been checked? Low thyroid activity can be an important factor and a correctable one.

In some instances the use of certain dyes or other material applied to the hair may be harmful. Here again a dermatologist can help trace and identify the trouble.

Nervous problems sometimes produce patchy loss of hair, and correction of them brings regrowth, but this takes time.

Finally, heredity is a strong force which we cannot change. Although baldness is many times more frequent in men than in women, a fair number of women are affected. This does not seem to be commonly known, doubtless because a woman with that trouble promptly and understandably resorts to a wig. Men are more prone to let their scalp shine.

Appealing as the idea of transplanting hair is, it isn't an easy solution to the problem. A skilled and deliberate investigation of the type of hair loss is the sensible first step before leaning to the conclusion that transplanting is going to be the answer. I have no doubt that the people who developed the transplanting technique will tell

Dear Dr. Molner: Are there any exercises one should avoid with a hiatal hernia? I'm referring to exercises in a trim-and-fit class in which I have enrolled.—MRS. C.C.

Lifting, particularly heavy lifting should be avoided. It is important to lose weight (internal fat) if you have a hiatal hernia, so exercises, except for lifting, will be helpful.

NOTE TO A.L.R.: Chocolate won't hurt you or your gall bladder, so don't be unduly upset by the "crepe hangers" you mention.

'Intimidation' Untrue — Landymore

HALIFAX (CP) — Rear-Admiral William Landymore last year in Halifax and 364 of the 367 officers supported his stand. But he said, the support was for his battle against unification — not allegiance to him. He said he would be "delighted" to appear before the Commons defence committee "at any time" to defend any of his previous testimony to it in June or his action. Admiral Landymore, recently fired as sea operations chief after publicly criticizing defence policy, Friday released an "uncensored" version of a brief he had prepared for the committee's secret meeting in June. He said that portions of his brief were changed on Mr. Hellyer's orders before he was allowed to present it to the committee.

Unity 'Lousy Idea' Says CWAC Veteran

TORONTO (CP) — "Unifying the services is a lousy idea," says Beatrice Freeman, 80, of Toronto, oldest ex-member of the Canadian Women's Army Corps. The integration idea should have gone into the waste-paper basket, she said at the corps' 25th anniversary celebration Friday night. Mrs. Joseph Staff of Toronto, president of unit 47 which organized the reunion, said in an interview she fears unification will lower morale. Mrs. Edith Shuter, formerly of Saskatchewan and now of Toronto, disagreed, however. "It should have been done long ago," she said. The 25th anniversary reunion is the first in 17 years for the CWAC. Veterans came from as far as Alert Bay, B.C., and Crowell, N.S. About 200 attended a wreath-placing ceremony Friday night. The 21,624-member CWAC disbanded in September, 1946 but was re-activated in 1951. It now has nine officers in the regular forces.

Ex-Convoy Chief 'Deplores' Stand

TORONTO (CP) — The admiral who was western anchor man in the Second World War Atlantic convoy service has stepped into the naval controversy with criticism of unification of the armed services and the firing of Canada's sea operations chief last month. In a letter to the editor of The Globe and Mail, Rear-Admiral Leonard W. Murray writes: "By all means have a joint staff at headquarters and at any other joint command so that every movement may be properly coordinated, but do not try to make every man of the present services interchangeable with every other." Rear-Admiral Murray, now 70 and living in Derbyshire, England, was commander-in-chief, Canadian North Atlantic, during 1943-45. With his British opposite number, the commander-in-chief, Western Approaches, he helped keep the convoys moving in those years. He retired from the Canadian navy in 1945 after he was censured in findings of a royal commission investigating the VE-Day riots in Halifax. He wrote to "deplore the action of the minister of defence in refusing to listen to the advice of his senior officers." This brought "about a situation in which it became necessary for an officer of the standing and ability, as well as courage, of Rear-Admiral William Landymore, to be forced to step outside the strict rules of procedure in order to bring home to the people of Canada... that all is not well with the system of integration which the minister is endeavoring to foist upon them, and on the three fighting services."

Crawling For Clues

What would bunch of grown men be doing on hands and knees on London common? They're combing ground for clues to Friday's killing of three detectives. Empty cartridge cases were believed in area. — (AP).

Big Raids By Police Net Little

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Eighty heavily armed police backed by 1,500 patrolmen staged simultaneous raids Saturday on four suspected private arsenals of militant civil rights organizations. They netted 24 sticks of dynamite in an apartment, said to be a headquarters of the Student Nonviolent Co-ordinating Committee. Nothing but civil rights posters and literature was found at the other locations.

Saturday night a 13-state alarm was out for the arrest of four suspects, all members of SNCC, wanted in connection with the theft of dynamite from a construction site. One of the suspects picked up in the raids implicated the other four.

Hedgehogs Full Of Cheer

BERLIN (UPI) — The East German newspaper Neues Deutschland has reported this story:

The unidentified occupant of a home in Leipzig was kept awake all night by strange noises from the cellar. The following morning he opened his cellar door and five drunken hedgehogs came reeling toward him. He found the animals drank a spilled bottle of advocaat (egg liquor).

Town Ponders 'Squeal' Law

MISSION CITY (CP) — This Fraser Valley community is considering an anti-noise bylaw that would work against tire-squealing motorists. Council was told it would be welcomed by the RCMP who then would be able to take action "against car drivers who are peeling rubber on our streets."

Muttering Missed

CHICAGO (UPI) — Open housing demonstrators and Chicago officials Saturday felt they had passed a major milestone.

Dr. Martin Luther King's marchers — more than 700 strong — Friday evening ventured into a potentially explosive all-white neighborhood, paraded through the streets to three realty offices where they prayed then left. No major incidents were reported.

JEERED, CURSED Thousands of white residents — most of them teenagers — jeered, cursed and threw rocks and bottles at the demonstrators. The Rev. James Bevel, one of the top King aides who led the march, said after the two-hour demonstration that the relative lack of violence demonstrated that people were becoming aware that Negroes can peacefully live in previously all-white neighborhoods.

HATE PAMPHLETS Bevel, inside the cordon of police, did not hear the muttering of the thousands who watched the demonstration in the Bogan area of the southwest side. Many had hate literature which carried the signature of George Lincoln Rockwell, commander of the American Nazi party. Some said Rockwell had the answers.

Masked Rapist Hunted in U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Residents of two suburban Maryland counties were on the alert Saturday for suspicious signs which might lead police to a masked rapist who has attacked 26 women during the last year.

Officials of Prince George's County, which adjoins the District of Columbia, disclosed Friday that massive police efforts to trap the attacker had failed and the public was being called on for help.

Police said the man's usual method of operation was to force his way into dwellings, threaten his victims with a knife or gun and assault them. He wears a Ku Klux Klan type hood, its color and material varying, according to his victims.

CLOTHED He has usually worn gloves and has been so completely clothed that until recently his race or age could not be determined, police said.

But this sketchy description was finally compiled: white, in his late teen or early 20's, slender and of medium height. Police said the rapist's victims ranged in age from 18 to 50. When a victim's husband was at home, the husband was tied up and the woman assaulted in another room.

Jet Practice Costs Crew

MEXICO CITY (Reuters) — A DC-8 jetliner of Aeromexico crashed near Acapulco airport during a training flight early Saturday killing all six crew members aboard, the airline announced. An investigation into the cause of the crash was immediately ordered by the state-owned airline and Mexican civil aviation authorities.

Recess Cut Possibility

By MICHAEL GILLAN

OTTAWA (CP) — If the government recalls Parliament from its recess a month early to handle a threatened national railway strike at the start of September, it is likely MPs will continue to sit through until Christmas.

Parliament now is scheduled to stand adjourned until Oct. 5, but informants say whatever time is left after a legislative settlement of the rail strike would be used for other business.

Besides the many issues the opposition parties might want to raise there is a possibility the government will bring in quickly its legislation based on the MacPherson report to modernize the railway system.

The government's argument will be that the railways will be unable to finance any wage settlement unless the MacPherson legislation is put through.

Prime Minister Pearson has avoided being pinned down on any action the government might take to deal with a railway strike.

However, the economic consequences for the country—including the export shipments of wheat—are so severe that it is a foregone conclusion the government cannot let a walkout continue for many days.

Some rail unions may strike before the end of this month. But if the unions join in a common strike deadline Parliament will probably begin sitting about Sept. 6.

Separatist Rebuked

POSTMASTER-GENERAL Jean-Pierre Cote makes sense when he says it would be to everyone's advantage to discard parochial, regional and even provincial concepts in Canada in order to achieve what is considered to be the first aim of all Canadians — national unity.

But it is questionable that national unity is indeed, the first aim of all.

Mr. Daniel Johnson, the Quebec premier, has made it very clear that his Union Nationale Party is more concerned with the preservation of what he terms the French "nation"; and that if it comes to a matter of choice he would sacrifice the confederation to the French Canadian ambition.

A protest from such a man as Mr. Cote carries far more weight than an outburst from someone of another background. He is one of an old family of Quebec, with a long political Liberal tradition, a Roman Catholic, a youthful 40 years of age, and a father of eight children. His words would have a very much greater impact than those of a Maritimer, for example, even one with a United Empire Loyalist heritage; and certainly far more than of a leader in the West.

The member from Longueuil, perhaps, is setting a pattern of resistance to the separatists long lacking in Ottawa.

It was politically inexpedient for the Liberal government — particularly while in minority — to stand against the impatient demands of Mr. Jean Lesage, himself a Liberal and former federal colleague of the prime minister.

But Mr. Johnson is of a different political color. And although his party is not called separatist, his policies are of a nature to lead, if pursued with any consistency, to the same end.

A critic of another background than Mr. Cote would have hesitated to compare, as he does, the Quebec separatist with the United States Negro. But it is perfectly valid in the sense that the new cry of Dr. Martin Luther King's more radical supporters is for domination rather than equality with another racial group.

"We too in Canada have extremists who, in order to obtain their goal wish to dominate others in building their own little kingdom," the minister maintained.

Mr. Cote's angry denunciation of separatism and all that it implies may be no more than a warning to Premier Johnson that if he expects co-operation from Ottawa he should revise his "nationalist" attitude; or it may have been a manoeuvre designed to strengthen Mr. Lesage in the Quebec political field. But it is the first voice in a long time to ring out with courage from the ranks of government against the arrogant demands of Quebec.

Even if he stands alone among his colleagues, Mr. Cote will have wide support from the other defenders of Confederation.

Parliamentary TV

THERE HAVE BEEN suggestions at Ottawa that Parliament should open its chambers to television cameras and let parliamentary debate be followed by the public at large on the small household screen. Nothing concrete has been advanced in this direction but no doubt the present approach in Britain to such proposals will be watched with interest.

At Westminster the House of Lords has already gone on record as agreeable in principle to televising its proceedings, and a Commons committee has now reported on the same subject. The latter takes a cautious view on the matter, which will come up later for general debate.

There is admission that the TV cameras might "bring out the ham" in some legislators, which wouldn't be at all surprising. This is a temptation which all television personalities find hard to resist. And politicians seeking to create an image for themselves — especially backbenchers given a chance to steal a limelight normally denied them — might easily fall victim to exhibitionism.

Principally, however, the committee did not rule out broadcasts entirely, but only after a short closed-circuit trial period to let the MPs themselves see how they looked before making a final decision.

Continuous live television did not find favor because this was considered "impracticable and undesirable." The cost alone for continuous broadcasting was too great, and live TV without cuts would increase the chances of "playing to the cameras." The committee preferred edited versions if parliamentary television was to be introduced.

This would seem to be a proviso sure to arouse as much conflict within parties as between them. Who got the screen coverage and who didn't would be a difficult problem to solve without a lot of hard feelings.

One other aspect of continuous TV transmission, although understandably not mentioned by the committee, is that this could be so boring to viewers they would turn to other channels. A diet of the long-winded speeches inseparable from parliamentary discussion would soon pall, as any reader of Hansard has ample opportunity to judge.

Yet probably to some degree or another television will get a foot in the parliamentary door, and so the British moves in this direction may be expected to invite similar action in this country.

For Adults Only

FEW WILL FIND FAULT with Secretary of State Judy LaMarsh's decision to go along with the Centennial Commission's advice not to stage a youth parliament as part of the celebrations of Canada's 100th birthday next year.

In turning down the proposed project Miss LaMarsh concurred with the recommendation of the commission which reported "on its continuing deep concern over the numerous problems inherent in both the organization and content of such a youth parliament which it felt could prove a disruptive rather than positive contribution to our centennial celebrations."

It is not difficult to guess that the commission was more than somewhat influenced in reaching this conclusion by the ill-starred antics of our already established national Parliament in Ottawa which over the past two years has proved itself to be "a disruptive rather than positive" force in Canada.

Thinking Aloud

... of shoes, and ships,

By TOM TAYLOR

If you peruse the Colonist with an avid eye, as I am sure you do, you will have read of the two British bridge champions who were accused of cheating in an international tournament.

They have been cleared of any such charge, so that ends that as far as this column is concerned. But cheating per se has awakened its curiosity.

There is cheating and cheating, you know. And the cheater is not always a person. Fate gets into the act. Had a sprinter at the Empire Games last week stumbled and fallen as he was winning a race, he would have felt badly cheated. But with no aspersions to cast at anybody.

Mind you, I have had it whispered to me that the odd card player in a friendly game where nothing really matters, has been known to depart slightly from the strict path of rectitude, but he, or she, is mostly indulging in personal delusion.

Or, giving either just due merely having a mental lapse.

This is what happens to some golfers. I have also been told, out merely for the sport of trotting the fairways with no trophy at stake and no one checking their scores, imagination can play havoc with arithmetic.

These, though, are akin to the little white lies that are an acceptable part of our social code. If there were none of them, by the way, society would be chaos.

So would Parliament, I imagine, where this sort of thing is nothing short of an art. Those evasive answers, for example, of the kind which one noted statesman cited as "terminological incoherencies." He didn't dare call them cheating, you see, this being extremely bad form.

Perhaps more "cheating" goes on when it comes to fishing. If I may presume to remark, then in any other sphere. At least the tall fish tales are legendary, so there must be substance to such notion. As a matter of fact I felt cheated myself some years ago at an office fishing derby.

I caught what I thought was a real big one but they told me it didn't count since it was a dogfish. This miffed me, I can assure you. They hadn't said beforehand the catch must be salmon, and in my ignorance I thought a fish was — well, a fish.

Incidentally, or perhaps not so incidentally, I have been intrigued to find that the original cheater, so-called, was an official of ancient days titled Escheator, who was appointed to collect dues and taxes. The use of the abbreviation shows how those officers were wont to fleece the people.

When we fill out our income tax forms each year I rather fancy we think we are still being fleeced.

Toussing on political matters it is a certainty that after the polls close next month in the provincial election some candidates are going to feel they've been cheated by the voters. Unwillingly perhaps on the latter's part but with direct effect nevertheless.

And of course when some of those grandiose campaign promises end with the ballot count the voters themselves are going to feel cheated.

You don't have to play bridge to be involved in this derogatory term, you see; innocently or otherwise.

The Parliamentary Jet Set

By RICHARD JACKSON, Colonist Ottawa Bureau

Or you get to go on one or more of the several junkets that the parliamentary committees lay on in the name of the public interest.

Such as the three-week tour of Europe that the Commons veterans affairs committee — on which ex-servicemen were in the decided minority — made just before Parliament recessed for the summer.

Best of all, if you miss out on one, you usually have a choice, so can latch on to another.

Like Liberal MP Auguste Choquette did.

Initially he was booked to go on the veterans committee's European tour, but the maverick Quebec MP was not exactly made to feel welcome aboard because, among other things, he had been advocating the "firing" of Queen Elizabeth, the severance of Canada from the Commonwealth, Canadian dis-association from all things British, and the establishing of a republic.

Anyway, Auguste Choquette was only eight when the Second World War broke out, so really had no personal interest, much less any kind of a stake in the life and times of veterans, dead or alive.

But as a consolation prize he got to go on the 10-day all-expense trip to Britain (of all places, for Auguste Choquette) with the Canadian delegation to the Commonwealth Parlimentary Association.

It isn't just the free flip that makes political life so worth the living. It's what goes with it. The fringe benefits of junket-ry: embassy dashes, ministerial cocktail splashes, VIP 12-course — with all-the-green-bowties dinner extravaganzas and games, assorted official fun and games.

But you can overdo it. Like the Ontario Liberal MP who went away so far and stayed away so long — on a globe-girdling trip to Malaysia and reel and line — and I want to thank The Daily Colonist for giving them to me. I, and many other fellow Californians, appreciate very much the opportunity of partaking in the contest sponsored by you. We think it is fine that we are eligible for the many fine prizes you award.

Chinese Help
I don't buy the line about letting Viet Nam fight its own internal war. The truth is that since January 1, 1966, Red Chinese troops and "advisers" sent to North Viet Nam have increased from 20,000 to 40,000.

These include logistic and engineering personnel, missile experts and troops, many of whom have been shot in South Viet Nam while masquerading in Viet Cong uniforms. This is in addition to the modern weapons captured and which are marked as being made in Red China, the U.S.S.R., Cuba, East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

Integration
To a powerless but interested looker-on, the aims of disintegration of the forces would appear to be abolition of tradition, esprit-de-corps, pride of service, etc., leading down to abolition of the Throne and establishment of a republic, on the way towards setting up a One World government with, perhaps, Mr. Pearson as dictator-in-chief, and Mr. Hellyer as his right-hand as Lord High

Softball Jolly Fine

From Colonist Files

AN advance party of Royal Air Force personnel had arrived at "a Lower Vancouver Island Airport," 25 years ago, to make preparations for the use as one of the largest RAF training stations in Canada.

Members of the party were interested in making the station as homelike as possible: furniture, radios and gramophones, books and magazines would be appreciated, a spokesman said. And sports equipment, too — some fine soccer and rugby players would soon be arriving, and, said the airman, "I think this game of softball is jolly fine. I saw some girls playing it at Sidney and the boys are anxious to master its details."

Victoria city council thought of selling most of the screeching and wailing passcocks and cranes at Beacon Hill Park — but there was doubt that anyone would take them. Parks Administrator W. H. Warren said he had enquired in Vancouver, and they were not wanted there.

Victoria-Saanich animosity had broken out, 30 years ago, and the mayor warned that the municipal council must at once stop saying nasty things about the city, himself and the aldermen.

Cause of discord was that Victoria had refused to pay any part of damages awarded a farmer against the Saanich police chief and the Victoria dairy inspector for demolition of some barns without proper authorization.

"Victoria said Saanich had made a blunder. Saanich said Victoria was trying to put one over on it."

"... If Saanich doesn't know the law," said Mayor Stewart, "I refuse to sit here and let them say what they are saying now."

"I did think that in the last two years we were getting along amicably with Saanich. But if they continue this sort of thing, I for one will not have anything more to do with them."

And, the Colonist recounted, "All the aldermen were greatly delighted with this declaration of independence, and cried 'Heave ho!'"

The 55-ton telescope for Little Saanich Mountain had just arrived in Victoria, destined to be at that time the largest in operation in the British Empire and the second largest in the world. Minus the lens, which was to come two weeks later, the telescope was conveyed in three cars from Cleveland.

Among the Little Locals, 15 years ago:

"Only a portion of the War-spite's band will play at the Hill on Sunday."

"The dollars a piece was what the privilege of fighting on the street cost two hoodlums, yesterday."

"His Lordship, the Bishop of Columbia, will give another of his enjoyable garden parties on the 25th inst."

"The obituary nails on the sidewalks are being made war upon by a small army of corporation workmen."

"Officer Carter is making the firing of guns in the park very expensive. A Chinaman was fined $12.50 for the offence, yesterday, and a white boy $2.50."

"A number of Indians from Barclay Sound are catching salmon near Beechy Bay. They are selling them on the Victoria market. They have put up their tents along the shore."

The news by "electric telegraph" normally was placed in the columns of the Colonist. In the order of its arrival, 100 years ago, although some of the most important items were given mention in small headlines at the top.

Thus, "Last Night's Despatches" started off a century ago today with the information that "the latest telegrams from the Continent state that affairs are unchanged," and then the reader learned — in this order — that cotton was dull in London; the truce between Italy and Austria had been extended 10 days; customs officers at Liverpool had seized six blockade runners for the U.S. government; Parliament had been "adjourned (prolonged)"; Consols in London on Aug. 11 were 87½; 5 50's, 84½; there was great excitement in London at the discovery of an attempt to blow up the Houses of Parliament with packages of gunpowder; the members of Parliament had fears of another Guy Fawkes plot; and finally, that "Deaths from cholera in London during the last week were 1,033, and from diarrhoea, 354."

Massive U.S. Program Evidence of Long War

By JACK FOINIE

Jack Foinie, now on leave from Saigon, reports from Washington that official thinking now is that the Viet Nam war cannot possibly be won in eight years with present troop levels or in less than five years with more than double the 500,000 Americans now involved.

Preparation for a long war in Viet Nam is evidenced by the mounting volume of semi-permanent military construction being contracted to U.S. companies.

Until recently all American construction relating to the war was being done by a single massive American combine of contractors.

Currently, this combine has 600 projects under way in Viet Nam at 37 sites. It finished up $30,000,000 of work in June, but has an $800,000,000 backlog. The American firm is building ports, airfields and garrisons. It had a labor force at the end of July of more than 45,000 men and women, of these, about 30,000 are Vietnamese.

The bigness of the effort, and the incessant demand of the military for speed in construction create problems enough. There is also the impact of construction spending upon Viet Nam's fragile economy. The conflict between the haves and the have-nots is beginning to be a source of friction.

During a recent strike for higher wages, a Vietnamese labor leader told reporters: "You taught us democracy. Now we're practicing it."

And when 10,000 laborers on projects around Saigon got a 15 per cent pay raise in early July, this led to demands for more money from the 2,000 Koreans and 3,000 Filipinos employed as on-the-job supervisors — to save face. The situation is further complicated by a "labor black market." Talented workers, after training at considerable cost, are lured away.

The 4,000 American engineers, employed by the combine in executive or supervisory capacities present another problem.

They are committed to 18 months in Viet Nam, and most of them are without their families. Living in apartments or in camps at building sites, men tend to live exuberantly when off duty, adding to local inflation and complicating American-Vietnamese relations. In hope of doing away with some of the construction program headaches and problems connected with wild spending and living by construction workers, the U.S. defense department is trying a new approach to contracting for future projects.

A single firm — Walter Kidde Constructors, Inc., of New York, a subsidiary of Electric Bond and Share Co. — is getting a unique type of contract in connection with the estimated $50,000,000 construction of an airfield and port at Tuy Hoa, on the central Viet Nam coast. Kidde must use American labor almost entirely to reduce the pressure on the Vietnamese labor market. The American workers — from pick-and-shovel men up to foremen — can earn $18,000 to $20,000 during the year they are on the job if they agree to have most of their wages banked at home, work long hours and live almost a spartan life.

To give them a chance to let off steam, the men will be flown to another Asian country for a week of "rest and relaxation" once a month or so.

Suez Canal Alternative To Be Built for Israel?

By TERENCE LYONS, from TEL AVIV

An alternative to the Suez Canal, cutting right across Israel territory between the Red Sea (Agaba Gulf) port of Ailat and the Mediterranean port of Ashdod, appears to be in an advanced stage of planning.

An international group of financiers with headquarters in Paris, reportedly headed by France's Baron Edmond de Rothschild, is already financing a technical study. Work on the first stage may commence as early as April, 1967, if financing is arranged by January.

The second stage, to be launched about a year later, would enable the canal to carry tankers up to 100,000-ton capacity, in both directions.

What is described here only as "unconventional" digging methods are expected to be used, making it the world's first major long range canal to be built with such super-modern means and methods.

Reportedly, Baron Rothschild and his associates are planning to issue a prospectus soon after Christmas, to be circulated mainly in France, Germany and the United States, offering a guaranteed return in the scheme.

Israel is expected to grant a 99-year concession to canal promoters, receiving in exchange one lump sum, plus a percentage of canal revenue.

While Israel's advantage would be by-passing the Suez Canal, since 1948 closed to Israel and Israel-bound shipping, tanker and other ship operators would benefit by cutting short their route from the Persian Gulf to Europe.

Parents Spurn Public Schools

What Has Gone Wrong?

Many parents must have been set wondering about our education system last week after the announcement of the creation of Craigdarroch School in Victoria.

In September the school will open with a class of not more than 20 five and six-year-olds under the care of Mrs. Jean Purcell, a capable-looking former teacher in the public schools who is now completing a further degree in psychology.

Housed temporarily at 1975 Joan Crescent, the school will aim for fluent bilingualism in French and English. New classes of beginners will be added in succeeding September, but the school will be ungraded. The children will progress at their own speed.

In addition to the public school curriculum, Craigdarroch pupils, as they get older, will discuss things like truth, honesty, freedom, tolerance and general morality. They will make objective studies of the great religions and philosophies.

They will become proficient in typing, shorthand and speed reading. Latent leadership qualities will be developed, and the school will foster "a highly active social conscience."

Craigdarroch School is being founded by a lawyer, a psychiatrist and two businessmen, all Victorians. Two of them have children who will be enrolled this fall, and the other two have younger children who will follow the same path.

Reading the high aims of the school's prospectus raises an inevitable question: why did four busy men find it necessary to establish a school so their children might get the sort of education they desire for them?

In other words, what's wrong with the public schools?

Lawyer David Hummel, one of the founding foursome, is as anxious as his partners to avoid the appearance of becoming a critic of the public schools. At the same time he admits to very definite ideas on what an education should be.

He often refers to the famous murder of a New York woman, during which scores of people looked on while she was stabbed and not one helped her or even called the police.

"That indicates a lot of people with no social conscience whatever," he said. "They aren't inherently wicked; they've just never been taught."

"If the schools would only accept the challenge of discussing moral problems with children..."

There's nothing especially novel or experimental about Craigdarroch School, he feels. Smaller classes, individual attention, ungraded schoolwork and the emphasis on character development have all been proven before.

The reason these things aren't being done to any degree in the public schools is simply the cost, says Mr. Hummel.

"If you halve the size of a class you pretty well double the cost all along the line."

"People shout for better education but they scream when the cost goes up."

"I think the politicians, the school boards and the teachers would like to do all the things we're going to do."

"But the politicians must gauge how much education the people will buy before they turn out the government."

Mr. Hummel and his friends worked for and are willing to pay for better schooling of their children. The rest of us can do the same if we're interested.

CITY HALL COMMENT
By A. H. MURPHY

It's problems, problems, problems at City Hall these days. One of them is posed by the proposed increase in parking meter fines from $1 to $2 — a move which, aldermen feel, is misunderstood by the public.

It is not directed at the average citizen but at a small, selfish group, mostly downtown, which is abusing the whole parking meter situation.

These people allow a certain sum each week for payment of meter fines. To them it is just a business expense and worth it so they can park near their premises.

Result, of course, is that meters are hogged by these characters and the whole aim of the parking meter system, which is to prevent long-time parking and keep the situation flexible, is defeated.

Perhaps a system of escalating fines might be the answer. Fine them $2 for a first offence and progressively higher (say $5 and $10) for additional offences committed within a month.

Of course City Hall is not unaware of the fact that an increased penalty may have the effect of more intensive use of the city's parkades. If this comes about it is all to the good, officials say.

As though they didn't have enough troubles aldermen were asked the other day to deal with a problem which seemed, on the face of it, insoluble.

There's a city bylaw, long on the books but only periodically enforced, which prohibits parking on the streets between two and six o'clock in the morning.

It was placed there to enable the public works employees to sweep the streets during the night. An incidental advantage was that it allowed parks department employees to water hanging baskets without obstruction.

Parks Administrator Herbert Warren recently insisted that the law be enforced. The reaction from hotel and motel operators was immediate and explosive.

This, they said, was a sure way of antagonizing visitors, many of whom arrived late and parked their cars on the street.

They played Hearts and Flowers on the "Don't Offend the Tourist" theme not forgetting to add that hotel people pay thousands in taxes. Nobody ever forgets to use that argument.

Of course even the tourist handlers admit that the more visitors the more litter, and nobody likes litter, and that the hanging baskets are a unique attraction and must be watered.

So what are the poor aldermen to do? Will they keep the streets clean and the baskets watered or will they risk offending the sacred tourist who leaves all his pretty money here?

But, on a more optimistic note: I walked down through Bastion Square and the Wharf-Langley Street area the other evening at dusk. It was not a warm evening nor was it chilly.

The inner harbor was ruffled by a southwest wind and the maple leaf banner in the square was heating a taton.

You could feel the winds of change moving through the district.

The square was bare without the trees which will be planted down its length. In the suburbs and the buildings which form the perimeter, the old Board of Trade building, the Duncan Building, the Dowell buildings and the others are, admittedly, a mess.

But these are deficiencies which will be soon corrected. It doesn't take any particular foresight to envision an artistic residential entertainment colony of great potential in the once moribund district — and soon. Keep your eye on it.

BACK GROUND

Cat Guests Don't Pay

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Wilma Macdonald, 31, quit the travel agency business in 1960 to start a boarding house for cats but the venture was a financial flop from the start and she has been ordered to close.

Mrs. Macdonald says she has 80 non-paying feline guests on the premises. "People started throwing cats over the gate and leaving them in boxes out front," she said.

City authorities called the house a health nuisance and lifted the zoning variance which allowed it to operate.

Forgiven Four Shun Mobs

DETROIT (UPI)—The Beatles invaded Detroit Saturday and, like Pied Pipers, led thousands of devoted fans who would rather forgive and forget.

They followed close behind the controversial remarks by John Lennon, but the thousands of fans who turned out to attend their two performances at Olympia Stadium decided they'd rather forgive and forget rather than fight or switch.

A wall of security closed around the group and a press conference scheduled for between shows was cancelled. The Beatles planned to use the time backstage to "eat and stay away from the mobs."

Lines of avid admirers, mostly girls, began lining up outside the stadium early Saturday.

More than 450 city, county and private police patrolled the stadium with walkie-talkies trying to keep the teen-agers under control.

In Chicago, Beatle fans who had forgiven and forgotten or who were unconcerned about John Lennon's statement streamed into the 13,500-seat International Amphitheatre—site of the world's largest four-footed livestock show.

The Beatles, sporting their hair a bit longer than it was on their last U.S. tour, played to near-packed houses there for two tumultuous concerts Friday.

If any of their Midwest fans were bothered by Lennon's comment, he apparently smoothed things over with his statement that he was sorry he had ever said it and that he merely meant to deplore the decline in religious zeal.

POPPING BUBLES

The bang-browed four performed on a makeshift stage at one end of the arena. They were plagued by screams from their amplifying equipment popping flash bulbs and ushers' flashlights.

Waves of sound coming from the throats of the fans—the girl-boy ratio in the audience was about 20 to 1—blotted out the famed Liverpool Sound. But the kids didn't come to listen—records are for that—they came to see and be seen.

The screaming crossed the threshold of pain whenever one of the Beatles turned his head to look the crowd in the eye.

COMBINED ACTION

When Paul McCartney, the most adept mugger of the group, turned to his right and grinned at about 100 young girls near the stage, it took the combined action of ushers and firemen to quiet them down. Two of them had to be manhandled back to their seats when they tried to rush the stage.

Another technique the ushers employed to quiet distraught girls was to shine flashlights in their faces. Bullfrog hunters have long known that light in the eyes causes animals to freeze, but the same trick didn't work with teen-aged girls. They had to be seated bodily.

ASSORTED ILLS

Six teen-age girls ended up in the first-aid station, suffering such assorted ills such as hysteria, shock, headache and fainting spells.

An usher said, "We carried three of 'em down on stretchers. Man, they're heavy."

When it was all over police, firemen and ushers had to chase many of the Beatle fans from the hall. Most just wanted to linger around the place where it all happened.

Western Gentlemen Wednesday

Swingers of generation or two ago will feel nostalgically at home Friday at Sanscha Hall in Sidney. Mart Kenney and his orchestra, with vocalist Norma Locke, will be offering evening of dance music that will recall happy hours of some years ago. Mart and his Western Gentlemen early won firm grip on top spot among Canadian dance bands.

Dillman Survives Crisis

Meet an Honest Actor

By MARGARET HARFORD
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — For an actor who thinks he is going to be a star, the realization that he isn't can be a painful shock, like the youth-worshipper who remembers with a pang when he was going to be 25 forever.

Bradford Dillman, one of the few honest actors in the Lotus Land of movies, says he held onto his dreams of stardom until a crisis three years ago forced him to face the truth about himself and where he was heading.

ON SUSPENSION

After seven years at 20th Century-Fox, Dillman went on suspension rather than take on any more poor movies. He sat it out for a year and a half, during which he got over his star complex, he says.

Brad finally departed for New York and started to study acting again.

"The end of the Fox episode was the end of my dream of being a big Hollywood star," admitted the 36-year-old actor.

"I decided just to be an actor instead, and I've come to think that's a more practical dream. For one thing, it has some longevity attached to it," he said.

Dillman, a slender, personable chap just under six feet, bears no visible scars from his studio defeat. He isn't particularly bitter and has the intelligence to relinquish one goal and adapt to another.

"Instead of becoming a movie star, I've become the anonymous man of TV," he said, good naturedly. "People walking along the street say 'There goes whatshisname.' I think that's very flattering."

His only TV series was not a success but he is quick to say, "I'll never knock television. That series (Court Martial) gave me financial security, a new audience and eight months in London. What's wrong with that?"

He said he prefers guest spots which give him a chance to play many kinds of roles and absorb an actor of script and sponsor problems. Brad is also getting back into films with the hope of doing character roles for which he now believes he is well prepared.

The classics are another with-in-sight goal for this San Francisco-born actor who married that indestructible beauty, Suzy Parker.

North Breezes...

The family with the sun burns and the mosquito bites came in looking like the end of the world. Our Maitre d' Les Szabo sensed they were tired of roughing it. He picked a table by the water, overlooking the pool, where the last rays of the sun glistened on polished silver, dainty glassware and snowy linen. Soft music wafted around them.

The lady of the family gave Les a look that said he'd moved her life.

They ordered beef fondue—juicy morsels of tenderloin steak that you dip by yourself into simmering butter until cooked, then immerse in a variety of gourmet sauces.

"In a way it's like camping," said the father.

"Hah," replied mother. And Les knew we'd made a hit again.

I have fought against it, but cannot fight any longer."

The note was found in the late April afternoon in 1941 when the brilliant English essayist and novelist Virginia Woolf was drowned in the River Ouse in Sussex at 59.

She lives on, and in several ways it is fittingly ironic that she does, in the small intellectual jokes which form the title of the most notorious play and the most interesting motion picture of recent years.

Part of the irony, and a commentary on the fleetingness of literary fame, is the fact that some percentage of those who are now seeing Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? don't get the small intellectual joke, don't know there was a real Virginia Woolf.

But there was, and the title joke apparently made its first appearance among the graffiti pencilled on a lavatory wall in Greenwich Village, where Edward Albee saw it and remembered it for use in his play.

Obviously, appreciation of the play and the film does not depend on knowing or not knowing there was a Virginia Woolf, nor knowing any of her work or the facts of her remarkable and tragic life. Albee has steadfastly refused to provide any keys to the meaning of his play and, as with most creative works, we are left to make of it what we may.

In the play, Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? cheated to the old Disney time Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf? first appears as in fact the kind of small-talk literary witicism that might briefly enliven a faculty cocktail party.

Yet at the play's end, after the savage and degrading events of the evening, Albee's failed professor, George, softly sings the fragment of song to his wife, Martha. Martha, haggard and subdued after the evening's destructiveness, now says in a hoarse whisper, "I'm afraid of Virginia Woolf, George; I'm afraid."

The line brings down the curtain; it is heavy with meaning, but what meaning? To my literal mind, the grounds for Martha's fear have always had to lie in her (almost certain) knowledge that Virginia Woolf contended with madness throughout her adult life and at last could fight her urge to self-destruction no longer.

A fear of madness — the inability to draw a clear line between reality and fantasy — seemed totally relevant to Martha's plight.

Significantly, when Albee's play was translated into one of the Slavic languages, the title became Who's Afraid of Franz Kafka? — a title figure who, like Virginia Woolf, had contended with madness and died a suicide.

Virginia Woolf was born Jan. 25, 1882. Her father was Leslie Stephen, who was editor of the monumental Dictionary of National Biography. His first wife was Thackeray's daughter, James Russell Lowell, the poet then serving as U.S. ambassador to the Court of St. James, was Virginia's godfather.

She grew up in the brightest literary company of the day. Thomas Hardy was a family friend, Lytton Strachey was another. At 30, already taking her own place in that company with her carefully, highly polished prose, she married Leonard Woolf, another young intellectual.

They bought a tabletop printing press, taught themselves the rudiments of the trade and, with a slim paperback volume containing one short story by each of them, started the Hogarth Press.

Its second slim volume, which like the first they printed and bound themselves, was a story by Katherine Mansfield. The fourth volume was of some poems by a curiously solemn young American they admired, T. S. Eliot.

The press, profitable from its first small volume, became a major literary influence. Mrs. Woolf wrote the reviews, essays, stories and novels, the perceptive, sensitive works which made her almost certainly the pre-eminent English woman of letters of her decades.

But the special and cluttered world in which her work arose had begun to change almost as soon as she had begun to write. The world in which, as much as anything else, a little fixed income went a long way, had begun to die in 1914: it was further wounded in the General Strike; it was given its coup de grace in 1939.

The Woolfs were twice bombed from their London quarters early in the war. They were staying in the Sussex countryside when Mrs. Woolf wrote her note despairing of her sanity and a crumbling world and walked to the quiet river.

Symphony's Cards Too Close to Vests

This seems to be a time of ferment and change for the local musical world.

The symphony conductor has resigned and despite the love duet, sung no doubt for public consumption by both parties, outward signs indicate relations have not been exactly harmonious of late.

The symphony almost got a new president — but not quite.

Anyone who was at the symphony society annual meeting in the art gallery not so long ago and who does not suffer from total amnesia must recall the eulogy to Jack Barracough when he "retired" from leadership of the group.

The praise Mr. Barracough received was well and honestly merited. He has served the society well and not himself when the going was tough and funds scanty.

Mr. Barracough would have served the society to better effect if he had been allowed to carry through his original intention of dedicating himself to his specialty of fund-raising.

Naming Jack Barracough chairman of the board should not for one moment be confused with the popular concept of being "kicked upstairs."

Mr. Barracough is still effective head of the symphony society. The very definition of his duties — to chair all board meetings — ensures this.

After 10 years in job he earned his scroll and lifetime ticket to all concerts.

No individual connected with the society deserves them more. Still Mr. Barracough would have helped the society more at this time had he allowed a new president to "get his feet wet" in running the society.

The musical ferment has also touched the relationship between the symphony and the Victoria School of Music. The movement of the symphony out of the school building is more than a physical decampment.

Probably the first evidence of this disengagement was the "promotion" of Otto Werner, producer of the school, to director of the school to dean.

Now the school has expanded and needs the space so the symphony offices will probably move to the University of Victoria campus.

The relationship between the university and symphony could become quite involved.

It has been suggested the symphony wait until the university makes up its mind on a department head for the music division of the fine arts department before selecting a new conductor.

The idea is that the new department head might conduct the orchestra as well as run the music division.

This would mean that, for the second half of the season, the orchestra would survive with guest conductors.

Naturally enough none of the individuals will confirm that these ideas have been tossed about, but privately they hint at them.

The real danger is, with so many cards being held so close to many vests, there is the chance the players will forget just what game they are playing.

The orphans' school, she said, "will start building any minute."

U.N.C.L.E.'s Sons Don't Mind Dad

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Is being a star's son a help or a handicap to a young actor?

Both, say Noel Harrison and Randy Kirby.

Noel, 32, singer, actor, Olympic skier and son of Rex Harrison, adds: "For a while I thought I'd never have an identity of my own. Then I realized most clearly that part of my identity is being Rex Harrison's son."

Says Randy, 23, stage actor, radio and television commercial performer and son of TV's Durward Kirby: "It's no longer a hindrance. Now it's a help."

The two sons are working together in the first television series for both — The Girl from U.N.C.L.E., an outgrowth of the man from same.

Harrison, whose acting herebefore was in repertory and bit parts of five British movies, plays a secret agent who with Stefanie Powers battles the evil forces of THRUSH. Young Kirby plays a trainee spy.

BROKE HIS NOSE

Each only slightly resembles his father. The London-born Harrison has a shaggy, dark blonde hair, large blue eyes and gracious manners. His nose was broken in sliding, a sport in which he represented Britain at the 1952 and 1956 Olympic Games.

His parents were divorced when he was six, but he calls his father, since married three times, "a good friend." Did Rex Harrison give him any advice?

"He advised me at some length, when I was 12, not to go into show business — then probably decided I wasn't going to take his advice."

Of having a famous father, Noel said: "Through much of my life it was a handicap, which I imposed on myself. Then I realized it was a great help. People remember your name and you can get in anywhere."

SCHOOL PLAYS

The Kirby family moved from Randy's native Chicago to New York along with his father's radio-TV career. Randy acted in school plays at Westchester's Bronxville high and since has stage-acted for five years.

Durward Kirby's fatherly advice:

"He told me to treat acting like a business, and if he ever found I couldn't put on the same size hat he'd cut my head off." Also, he said: "Save your money."

Both dancers, Maureen Lawson and Paul Blakey, are students at the Wynne Shaw Studio. Miss Lawson will dance two solos while Mr. Blakey will dance the featured role in By Jupiter. Both will appear in ensemble numbers.

BACKSTAGE

The Liquor Control Board dropped a heavy blade through Harry Hill's hopes for a smashing success with Maximum Speed 20.

After granting the entertainer a licence to allow him to include one drink in the price of a ticket for the revue, the LCB suddenly cancelled.

Apparently the civil servants found they shouldn't have issued the licence, so Harry paid for the mistake.

He said that, when he tried to complain about the treatment, he got a very curt reply and that was that.

The relaxing late-night revue at the McPherson had an arrangement with a restaurant to provide one glass of refreshment per ticket.

Cancellation of the licence in mid-run threw an ice cube into the show's girdle.

Weekly performances were cancelled because of lack of audience, with the revue running only on the weekend.

"Sometimes the number of people he had was shocking," Harry said.

Harry moved to New York this fall for two years of work at a graduate school of theatre.

Droll But Difficult

No doubt the experience in the last two weeks will provide the entertainer with a droll story about B.C. liquor regulations to tell friends in New York.

But he'll have to be pretty convincing to make them believe our liquor laws.

Also leaving for New York this fall are Don Crawford and the Right People.

Don and Denis Scherk and Reid Hudson are heading for the big city to work in the eye of the entertainment world.

Mannequin Prop For Hat Theft; Guilt Admitted

Patrick Radford took a hat from the men's wear department at Eaton's Friday and placed it on a mannequin. Then he returned, took the hat and left the store.

He was stopped outside, and in central magistrate's court Saturday pleaded guilty to theft under $50.

Radford, 1465 Fort, was remanded to Monday for sentence.

He told Magistrate William Ostler he did not plan the theft.

Twenty-year-old Douglas Hamm was trying to climb out a window when police found him in his girlfriend's apartment at 1 a.m. Saturday.

The girlfriend complained that Hamm had ripped her housecoat and hit a friend, court was told.

Hamm became very abusive when police spoke to him and started to fight when escorted outside.

Hamm, 143 Government, pleaded guilty to obstructing a peace officer and was remanded to Monday for sentence.

A man who walked out of Riverview Hospital at Essondale Wednesday was arrested in Victoria Saturday for vagrancy.

Keith Heselson pleaded guilty to vagrancy and was remanded to Tuesday for sentence.

SLEPT IN PARK

"He can't be permitted to walk the streets in this condition," Magistrate Ostler said.

Heselson admitted he had slept in Beacon Hill Park Friday night. He also admitted having been committed to Essondale four times in the last two years.

Convicts on Drugs Attack 11 Guards

WALPOLE, Mass. (UPI) — Wary guards conducted a cell-by-cell shakedown of Walpole state prison Saturday in search of drugs or weapons that might have been used in a brief but bloody riot Friday night.

While the shakedown was in progress, prison officials questioned scores of convicts about the Friday night uprising, in which 11 guards were stabbed, slashed or beaten.

James J. Canavan, a spokesman for the Massachusetts corrections department which runs the maximum security prison, said prisoners implicated in the riot would be charged with malicious destruction of state property, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and possibly more serious crimes.

IN SOLITARY

Canavan said the specific charges would be determined by the Norfolk County district attorney's office following completion of the investigation.

Fifteen convicts who participated in the riot remained in solitary confinement Saturday pending the outcome of the inquiry.

The convicts went on the apparently spontaneous rampage while waiting in the nightly "pill line" to receive medication. They locked themselves in the prison hospital and devoured pills, drugs and other medication by the handful.

A state police officer who helped put down the outbreak said the prisoners were "pretty hopped up."

Civil Servants Sought

Alliance Starts Major Drive

Federal civil servants, united for the first time in a common front, have launched a major drive for membership in their new bargaining organization, the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

The civil servants had previously been split into two groups, the Civil Service Federation of Canada and the Civil Service Association of Canada.

NOT OFFICIAL

"While the alliance is not yet official, since we have not had a founding convention, we want to have a good membership when the collective bargaining legislation becomes operative this fall," said Mr. Campbell.

"No longer will employee groups be forced to accept unilateral decisions by the treasury board on their pay and working conditions.

"Arbitration will be available and will be binding on both sides."

Applications are also being accepted for the renting of homes as polling stations. Fee is $20 for the first poll and $10 for the second.

The presidents of the local councils of both groups, Gordon Campbell and Bruce Miller, have announced that their groups have joined forces to bolster membership and to attract new membership for the new alliance.

He pointed out that no such right was available to B.C. civil servants, "and it is no credit to the present provincial government that this is so."

"We would do anything we can to help them gain bargaining rights," said Mr. Campbell.

GAINED RIGHTS

He said the civil servants gained bargaining rights after 50 years without them, because each of the four major parties was asked to state the party's position on such legislation before the 1963 election.

The Liberals won, and the legislation is now to be enacted. "The right to bargain is not easily won," said Mr. Campbell, "and we need a good solid membership to be effective."

People and services rather than dollars will set the tone of this fall's Community Chest fund-raising campaign, co-chairman Jack Noble announced Saturday.

The amount needed to carry out the community services will be $452,000, he said. The six-per-cent rise from last year is due to more people being served, and a general increase in the cost of living.

ONE IN EIGHT

This fall's campaign will begin Oct. 21 and last until the end of the month.

The bare-minimum quota will provide services of one kind or another to one in eight residents of the capital region.

But the Community Chest is thinking in terms of people, not just a money goal, Mr. Noble declared.

COMMUNITY JOBS

"The huge number of services provided by our member agencies are simply the jobs any community must do," he said. "Though $452,000 may sound like a lot, remember that it would take millions if there were a multitude of appeals.

"Government administration would require a huge overhead. Not one of our United Appeal organizers or canvassers is paid a cent."

PER CAPITA COST

Under the Community Chest, the capital region will be served in the coming year for about $2.50 per capita.

Nearly 3,000 unpaid organizers and canvassers will seek a "fair share" donation from everyone who is working, geared to one day's pay for wage-earners or one per cent of income for professional and business people.

The Community Chest serves the whole capital region, from North Saanich to Metcheson.

CHEST ACTIVITIES

Its agencies support youth activities, supervise parole for boys in trouble, aid the blind, help homeless children, provide activities for the aged, feed lost animals, and even co-ordinate Christmas gifts for the needy.

Surplus Food Stall Opening Saturday

The surplus food stall will be opened next Saturday at the Elks Home, 752 Cormorant, by Mrs. Joan Price.

Donations will be picked up from anyone calling Mrs. Price at 478-4870 or Mrs. Corbett 478-3457. Food will also be collected at Fairfield Moving and Storage Ltd., 759 Cormorant.

Brain Damage Caused Death

A coroner's inquest was told Saturday that 21-year-old David Patterson died of multiple skull fractures and extensive brain damage on the left side of his head.

Mr. Patterson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Patterson, 897 Vernon, was fatally injured Thursday when a 45-gallon drum he was cutting with an acetylene torch exploded.

BLUNT FORCE

The chief pathologist of St. Joseph's Hospital, Dr. G. L. Walther, said the injuries were caused by a blunt force.

William Hanke, a Californian holidaying in Victoria, was one of the first on the scene after the explosion in the car-wrecking yard run by the elder Patterson.

NOT FILLED

Mr. Hanke said he was a certified welder and he had never attempted "to burn a drum unless it was filled with water."

He added: "You never know what might be in it." The inquest was adjourned until 7:30 p.m. Aug. 22, in the Law Courts.

Attendance Record Falls At Big Luxton Show

By NANCY BROWN

Fourteen acres of litter scattered by 10,000 people, was the desolate sight for a cleanup crew at Luxton Fairgrounds this morning.

A handful of volunteers were to be out bright and early picking up candy wrappers, squashed toffee apples, and discarded hot dogs and to pack up Luxton Fall Fair for another year. (See results Page 43.)

This year's show, on Friday and Saturday, broke all records for entries and attendance, a jubilant publicity chairman, Arthur Kitley reported. Standards of exhibits also, were rising steadily, he said.

EDUCATION

Among the southern Island fall shows, Luxton featured an education exhibit.

Senior students from Belmont High School spent Wednesday setting up the exhibits of work from local elementary schools, from Belmont high and Elizabeth Fisher junior high.

"This is the best form of public relations the schools have," said the chairman of the education section, Harold Palsson. "Parents who don't bother with school events or Parent-Teacher meetings come to the fair, and look around this building."

SCIENCE SHOW

"Teachers come, too, and get new ideas after seeing the work being done in other schools."

The high school science demonstration was arranged entirely by Belmont students. They explained the uses of some of the expensive new equipment recently installed in the school.

"The taxpayers may as well see where their money is going," said Mr. Palsson. "The binocular microscope tubes alone cost about $260 each, and we have 12 at the school now for the new biology course."

SHARED

Members of five church women's auxiliaries united in a miniature ecumenical council to provide food for fairgoers.

Proceeds from the food concessions will be divided on a percentage basis among the churches taking part: Our Lady of the Rosary Catholic Church, Langford; Metcheson and Langford Anglican Churches; Gordon United; and Redeemer Lutheran.

The two-day horse show attracted 85 entries for the Western and English classes.

COMBINED

A committee of representatives from the six horsemen's clubs in the area took over the section, which continued non-stop through Friday and Saturday.

New York Exhibit

Patent Received

Rock Sparked Invention

By BOB PETHICK

An idea that began with a child skipping a rock across the water will go on display at the new patents exhibition New York next week.

"I began to think about applying that principle to boats," said Bill White, 798 Lampson, as he sat in his living room holding a drawing and legal description of his hydrofoil invention.

Next week it goes on show at Patent Exhibits, Inc.

He became even more enthusiastic when he watched water skiers skim across the water and then began experimenting with his idea of a hydrofoil for small boats.

"What impressed me was the ease with which they went through the water. I thought if some arrangement could be made for small boats that would lift their sterns and cut down drag, it would be a good idea," said the retired 74-year-old fireman.

That was four years ago.

Since then, through study and experiment, the man who believes that keeping busy is the best way to enjoy retirement, has reached the stage where his invention has been issued a U.S. patent. The next step is the trip to New York, where his model will be put on display to be studied and considered by manufacturers.

"It is so ridiculously simple I hate to admit it took four years to complete," says inventor White.

Mr. White feels that to persevere at a project is 90 per cent of the secret of success.

His invention consists of two slotted brackets about 30 inches long which are attached to the hull of a small boat. Set into these slotted brackets are two fins, from which other fins branch off at an angle of about 60 degrees. The whole device is built of 14-gauge aluminum.

When not wanted, the fins can be removed.

"The increase of efficiency when the hydrofoils are installed would, of course, vary with the boat," said Mr. White.

He reckons the efficiency of his own small wooden boat, equipped with an experimental set of fins, and 10-horsepower engine, has increased between 20 and 25 per cent.

An experimental run in the small boat shows the stern drag cut considerably with the fins riding on the surface.

In the inventor's own words: "This device has for its purpose the increase of forward speeds of all planer type outboard boats."

Paddlers Dunked In Ocean

By WILLIAM THOMAS

MONTAGUE HARBOR — Members of the Quebec canoe team who were dumped into the icy waters off Point Grey had hardly a chatter left in their teeth when they made camp here Saturday night.

Captain of the team, Gil Tinkler who is from Mont-

Laurie north of Montreal, was so enthusiastic about his well come by over 200 island residents it was hard to keep up with his flow of French.

He explained how his six-man team was swamped as their canoe ran into heavy swells off Point Grey.

Strong westerly winds and an incoming tide combined to dunk the Quebecers with the loss of their water bottles and a few paddles.

Mr. Tinkler said "it seemed like an hour before our crew was picked up from that chilly water."

Asked to comment on his reception to the Pacific Ocean Mr. Tinkler just laughed.

Phil Barter who was aboard an RCN harbor patrol vessel commented "It may have seemed like an hour but actual time in the water was more like 15 minutes."

A Vancouver City Police boat moved in fast and took the soaked paddlers aboard.

The navy's auxiliary vessel Clifton took the canoe from the water and then picked up the crew for the trip to Galiano Island.

Crossing Suspended

The near disaster forced officials of the Canadian Centennial Canoe Pageant to suspend the crossing of the Georgia Strait less than an hour after it had started in Vancouver.

This was the first serious accident in the eight days of racing. Luckily none of the Quebec crew was injured.

With the first salt water lap cancelled other event organizers, the Coast Guard cutter Ready, and an RCMP boat moved in and picked up the other crews and their canoes.

"We were very disappointed at missing the salt water lap," said Mr. Tinkler. The other crews were also unhappy about being ordered out of the water.

A race official explained "all 10 crews were exhilarated by their first taste of the wave-tossed salt water. It was the first in the 650-mile race."

The crews wanted to continue but Mr. Barter said "the trail craft could not cope with the short choppy swells which quickly had them taking on water."

Quebec's crew were not the only casualties, the choppy sea and heavy swell had some officials turning a bilious green and a few heading for the side.

At the time of the swamping the Manitoba crew was in the lead with British Columbia second, Alberta in third spot and then the luckless French-Canadians.

Saturday night Galiano residents did their best to make it up to the visitors.

Bonfire with Songs

Mary Backlund and Gordon Angus McDonald were chosen to offer the official greetings on behalf of the islanders.

Mrs. Backlund was chosen because her ancestors have lived in the area for five generations.

Mr. McDonald's forefathers came to Canada in 1749 from Scotland to join the Hudson's Bay Company.

After the formal welcoming speeches the islanders got down to the serious business of showing the canoeists a good time.

A giant bonfire was built in Montague Park and canoeists joined their hosts in a campfire singalong.

Centennial committee chairman L. J. Wallace came out of the celebration with a handsome gift.

Mary Backlund presented him with a driftwood lamp made from Galiano juniper.

After a night under canvas the crews, and Galiano residents will gather at 10 a.m. today for an outdoor interdenominational service led by Naval Command Chaplain A. G. Faraday.

Express Race On Program

Colwood Trail Riders will give their 17th annual gymkhana a touch of the Old West this afternoon.

To top off a program of Western events the club will stage a pony express race.

Program which starts at 12:30 p.m. at 641 Happy Valley Road includes novice and open jumping competitions.

Wails Work Win While Welsh Wait

KINGSTON, Jamaica — The United Kingdom of Scotland, England, Northern Ireland and Wales tottered on the brink of dissolution when Lord Swansea, 41, a Welsh publisher, stepped up to receive his gold medal for the .303 rifle shoot at the British Empire Games.

In red jacket he moved forward as the announcer said that Mr. Lord of Swansea, England, had won the medal. The band played Land of Hope and Glory, and somebody ran up the Cross of St. George.

"Wales! Wales! Wales!" cried the affronted Welsh team. The announcer corrected his error. Lord Swansea was recalled. But — horrors! — the band played God Save the Queen.

A third time, Lord Swansea was called to the stand. Up went a banner with "Wales" in crimson letters. Up struck the band with Land of My Fathers.

And Lord Swansea finally and properly received his gold medal.

Jamaica Thrills End With Brilliant Mile

KINGSTON, Jamaica (CP) — Abby Hoffman of Toronto won the gold medal in the women's 880-yards and Kenya's wonderful runner, Kipchoge Keino, ran a brilliant 3:55.3 mile as the British Empire Games ended Saturday.

Miss Hoffman, 19-year-old student at the University of Toronto, gave Canada its 14th gold medal of the games — the highest tally of golds in 32 years. In the 10 track-and-field events held on the ninth and final night of the games, Canadians won one gold, one silver and three bronze medals. The five medals raised Canada's final medal total of 57, the best record by a Canadian squad since the second games were held in London, in 1934. That year Canada won 16 golds alone.

BEST SINCE WAR

Swimmers and divers, accounted for almost half of Canada's medals with a total of 25. But the track and field team easily had its best showing of the post-war era with three golds, three silvers and eight bronzes.

Saturday, Miss Hoffman won the 880 in her best time ever — 2:04.3 — to redeem her poor showing in 1962 at Perth, when she finished last.

TRAIL VAULTER

The Canadian mile relay team won a silver for its second-place finish behind the record-breaking Trinidad-Tobago entry. Jenny Winger of Toronto won a bronze for third in the women's 80-metre hurdles; Carol Martin of Thornhill, Ont., got another bronze in the women's discus and Gerry Moro of Trail, took a bronze in the pole vault.

England regained her position as the top athletic country in the Commonwealth with a total of 33 gold medals out of the 110 awarded for individual and team efforts. The only sport England didn't get a medal in was wrestling.

CUT DEEPLY

Australia, which won the medal honors in 1962, finished second this time with 23 golds. In 1962, the Australians won a whopping 33 golds while England had 29.

This time, Canada cut deeply into Australia's swimming supremacy and won seven golds in the pool.

The mile was a thriller with the first six finishers breaking the four-minute barrier. Keino, the Commonwealth's outstanding male athlete, completed a unique double by winning it in a Games record time.

DOZEN YARDS

A crowd of 30,000 gave him a tremendous ovation when he crossed the finish a dozen yards in front of Alan Simpson of England. Keino, the first to win in Games history, clipped 2.1 seconds off the record of 3:57.4 he set in the heats.

Ergas Laps of Toronto clocked his best mile — 4:01.0 — but could do no better than seventh in the eight-man field.

Rallying Nicklaus Worries Leader

CLIFTON, N.J. (AP)—Young Bill Martinale soared into a two-stroke lead but felt the heat of a rallying Jack Nicklaus Saturday in the third round of the $100,000 Thunderbird golf classic.

The 27-year-old former Texas A&M athlete fired a six-under-par 66 for a 54-hole total of 207 over the 7,055-yard, par-72 Upper Montclair country club course.

Nicklaus also shot a 66 which placed him in a tie at 200 with Mason Rudolph and Tommy Aaron.

Rudolph shot a 70. Aaron, coming from four shots off the second round race, fired a 67 during a near-perfect day on a course made easy by pin placements and shortened tees.

LEADER FALTERS

Second-round leader Billy Casper blew to a 76 for a 54-hole total of 214 and a 15th-place tie with Arnold Palmer.

Following Nicklaus were Jacky Cupit and Tom Weiskopf.

Disgusted Pro Takes 108 On One Hole

By MILTON RICHMAN

CLIFTON, N.J. (UPI)—Golfers Dave Hill, the guy who took 108 strokes on one-hole, had better start practicing — answering questions.

He's bound to find out in a hurry that a moment of annoyance automatically will cost him a lifetime of weary explanation.

Unless he can come up with some kind of flip answer, like maybe "the green was a little bumpy," Hill will discover most everyone he meets from now on will want to know exactly how he took 108 strokes on the final hole of the second round in the Thunderbird classic.

The 29-year-old Jackson, Mich., native, who played professionally eight years, may start by saying he never really took 108 strokes — which he didn't.

That will never satisfy anyone who wasn't there to see it Friday and he'll be astounded by the hundreds of thousands who will claim they were as the years go by.

There were no more than 200 people around the 18th green when Hill made his final putt for getting immortality.

And there wasn't one among those 200 who had any inkling history was being made. The only clue Hill gave them was that he pushed rather roughly after Canada's George Knudson, one of his playing partners, holed out.

The reason Hill was in such a hurry was because he was disgusted. So much so that he "raked" his second putt after missing with his first one.

U.S. Takes Two In Davis Cup

CLEVELAND (AP)—Dennis Ralston and Clark Graebner won singles matches Saturday to start the United States off with a 2-0 lead over Mexico in the Davis Cup American Zone final.

A U.S. victory in the doubles today could wrap up the championship.

Ralston, his big service booming when he had to have it, empowered Rafael Osuna, 6-4, 2-6, 7-5, 6-1, in the second match.

The 6-foot-2 Graebner also cashed in on a superior service in downing John Luis Mayo in the five-set opening match, 6-0, 4-6, 6-1, 3-6, 6-3.

OC Cricket

LONDON (Reuters)—Cricket play began in Saturday's cricket matches: At Lord's, Middlesex 254, Lancashire 5; E. Higgins three for 21; Lancashire 56 for 3; At Trent Bridge, Essex 201, Yorkshire 41, 2; Taylor 3 for 27; Nottinghamshire 1 for no wicket; At Cheltenham, Gloucestershire 148, A. Bates 4 for 41; Sussex 56 for one; At Edgbaston, Warwickshire 173, R. Edmunds 41, L. Cline 3 for 41; R. Cohen 3 for 41; West Indians 17 for no wicket.

THAT HOT WATER TANK COULD BE A TIME BOMB

Most people wouldn't want a pound of Nitro-Glycerine stashed in their basement or kitchen.

For if such a hefty package of that extremely volatile liquid exploded it would release two million foot pounds of energy.

The bang would be something to remember—if you survived.

And, yet, in that simple hot-water tank which faithfully heats the water for washing the dishes or clothes, the average home packs more than the equivalent of one pound of Nitro.

At 50 pounds pressure per square inch in a 30-gallon hot-water tank water flashes into steam at 250 degrees. If at that point the energy were released by a rupture in the tank the energy released would total 2,021,500 foot pounds.

There is no need to read the above with alarm. Most hot-water tanks are installed by skilled Journeymen Technicians who know their trade well.

There should be cause for concern, though, if your hot-water tank was installed by an amateur or if it hasn't been checked for a long time.

Even for such a simple and accepted gadget combined temperature and pressure protection is vital.

Sweet Revenge

In first overtime final for U.S. women's amateur golf title, JoAnne Gunderson Carner of Seattle Saturday defeated Ontario's Marlene Stewart Streit to win championship for fourth time. Mrs. Carner sank two-foot putt to par fifth extra hole after 36-hole final at Sewickley, Pa. Strike-Lockout Brings Building In Victoria to Near Standstill

By JIM BRAHAN

Major construction in the Greater Victoria area has almost come to a complete standstill as a result of the lockout-strike situation between the carpenters' union and the contractors.

Vitally needed educational facilities are being held up by the lockout, put into effect by about 20 Victoria major contractors.

The University of Victoria's $2,100,000 social science complex and the education and arts complex, worth nearly $3,000,000, will be seriously affected by a prolonged carpenters' lockout.

The two complexes will be needed this school year to accommodate students formerly using three buildings on the university's Lansdowne campus which have been committed to be abandoned by the university.

'QUAD' HELD UP
Word has also stopped on the $200,000 central quadrangle development. The quadrangle is to be used as a concrete walking area between buildings.

The finishing work on the social science building is being done by Burns and Dutton Construction (1962) Ltd., and the education and arts complex by Farmer Construction.

Another large project of the Burns and Dutton company that is tied up is the $2,500,000 No. 6 Kilm development at the Ocean Cement Ltd., Bamberton plant.

SCHOOLS DELAYED
Another large Victoria contracting firm has halted work on alterations and additions at Victoria High School, Cordova Bay Elementary, Mount Newton Junior High School, and Claremont Senior High School.

Work has also ceased on the new 73-room Reynolds Road High School.

OTHER PROJECTS
Among the many other construction projects gripped in the lockout are: the new $30,000 Yarrow's Ltd. office building, the $1,500,000 new federal building under construction at Vancouver and Johnson, and all carpentry work on the grandstand at Royal Athletic Park.

Some 200 contractors throughout the province have locked out their carpenter employees.

DEADLOCKED
Both the carpenters and management are deadlocked over two major issues: the shorter work week and the union hiring system.

The carpenters proposed a 35-hour week instead of the present 40 hours at no reduction in pay, plus a wage increase of 30 cents an hour in a two-year contract.

The contractors proposed a wage increase of 45 cents an hour over three years.

UNION HIRING
The companies also rejected the 35-hour week and are seeking elimination of union hiring—where an employer calls the union for men.

The carpenters had voted in favor of strike action in a government-supervised strike vote.

The contractors said that a strike against any one or more of the companies represented by the Construction Industry Joint Negotiating Committee would result in a lockout by all of them against the union.

Carpenters struck at the Dunsmuir Junior High School project on Painter Road at Colwood. The also walked off some construction projects on the mainland.

The walkout triggered the contractors into carrying out the threatened lockout.

The Stamp Packet

By FAIR ANGUS

Rarest of all the fine British Columbia and Vancouver Island items sold by Stanley Gibbons at his London auction early in July, was a stamped envelope, U.S. type U15 with triple franking: a Black Jack 2c, British Columbia 5c Scott Type A3 and a Great Britain 6d.

Estimated value of the cover which bears the Wells Fargo cachet and New York and London hand stamps, was $2,240. It sold for $2,520.

A Cariboo Express cover sent during the gold rush to the Murphy family in Stamford, Willand County, Canada West, was handled by at least six different carriers before delivery. It brought $1,880 and a Dietz and Nelson cover with Cariboo Express label fetched $1,485.

The sum of $1,290 was paid for a Nubia Carrier's cover franked with U.S. 30c Type A12 tied with a San Francisco postmark 1861 and bearing a Post Office Victoria, V.I., oval cachet.

A U.S. cover to London, April 1860, bearing New York and London hand date stamps and backstamped with Wells Fargo oval Victoria, went for $1,540.

The following territories will participate in the World Health Organization omnibus issue to be released September 20, in reference to the new headquarters building at General

Questions And Answers

By CHARLES A. TAYLOR

Q. My wife fears we have termites in our 10-year-old house. How can you tell without going to a lot of expense?

A. The best way is to call a professional pest control service for an inspection. The experts know how and where to look for any visible evidence. You can check with several firms to compare costs. An inspection should not be expensive, but any work that is needed may be.

Q. How can I remove brown stains from a concrete sidewalk? They were probably made by a fertilizer containing iron.

A. There are several good cleaning preparations for concrete on the market. Check with your masonry supply dealer or paint store. Here also is a do-it-yourself method:

Mix one part sodium citrate to six parts of water and six parts of commercial glycerine. Add sufficient whitening powder to form a thick paste. A coat of this paste should be kept on for one week and new paste added when it dries out.

If the stain is stubborn and still remains, make another paste of the same material and repeat the process. Heavy layers of this are especially recommended for rust stains.

Q. How can I make the caulking around the bathtub last longer?

A. Paint it with enamel the same color as the walls or tile above the tub.

This will not make it waterproof, but it does increase the water resistance and thus will give the caulking compound longer life.

FDR Romance Fuss Surprise to Author

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Jonathan Daniels says he is "quite surprised at the commotion" caused by a reference in his new book to a romance between the late president Franklin D. Roosevelt and the late Lucy Mercer Rutherford.

"I'm surprised," said Daniels, "because I wrote of this in greater detail in The End of Innocence, published in 1964. The new book, to be published Aug. 19, is called The Time Between the Wars."

"The passage in the new book that seems to have aroused all the attention is only about two pages long," said Daniels, an aide to Roosevelt.

The passage in question states that the president's wife, Eleanor, "was bitter and jealous of Lucy during all the years until the last when at Franklin's death in 1945 she found that Lucy, on one of her several trips to Warm Springs (Ga.) had been with her husband when he died."

Strangers Terrify Eskimo Fishermen

GAMBELL, Alaska (AP) — that gas had been drained from two snow vehicles and his skin boat had been slashed. He brought his family into Gambell, largest community on the island.

Gambell is at the northwest tip of the island, about 35 miles from Siberia. Most of the other native fishermen also left their camps and came into Gambell.

Alaska State Trooper Lowell Parker and an Alaska national guard Eskimo scout detachment went to investigate the incident Wednesday and have not returned.

Chford Ikroknok, a fisherman, said he and his family were in a house at their fishing camp 20 miles from Gambell Tuesday night when he saw the men draining gasoline from his Weasel, a snow vehicle. Ikroknok said he fired a couple of shotgun blasts and the men fled. Ikroknok said he discovered

Elderly Advised To Play It Safe

NEW YORK (UPI) — Special steps should be taken to assure the safety of older persons in the home, says the Council On Family Health, a non-profit public service organization here. The Council, pointing out that senior citizens experience more than their share of accidents around the house, suggests they take the following measures:

- Have senses of sight and smell checked periodically by a doctor. This will give you a guide to your abilities to read medicine labels or detect a gas leak.
- Keep a bell in the bathroom to ring for help in case of a fall or faintness, when the voice may be too weak to be heard.
- Check walking sticks regularly for strength. Make sure the rubber tip is not worn.
- Check house slippers and shoes for perfect fit. They should have non-skid soles.
- Wipe up slippery floors immediately. Place a rubber bath mat in the tub before stepping in.
- Homes for senior citizens should have low bathtubs, low beds, and handrails in the bathroom. Staircases should have handrails on both sides.

440-450 SIMCOE

VICTORIA'S ARCHITECTURAL BREAKTHROUGH INTO OUTDOOR SPACE

90 feet apart the twin towers of Simcoe Investments newest apartment complex soar unchallenged more than 200' above the waters and shoreline of James Bay, giving evidence to the rebirth of this Historic central Victoria community.

Less than two years after HENSON BULLDOZERS started preparing the site by leveling home of prominent early citizens, the Simcoes stand completed a monument to C. J. OLIVER, General Contractors, co-ordination of sub trades. Starting with OLIVER EQUIPMENT SERVICE & SUPPLY LTD. — Who blasted the rock and excavated the site and BUTLER BROS. SUPPLIES who trucked the hundreds of loads of specially prepared concrete, (first, the Lord Simcoe, which has been open for a year; and then the Lady Simcoe, now completed for you who have been on the waiting list) rose majestically up. Every apartment from the spacious one-bedroom to the custom designed de luxe three-bedroom residence enjoys unequalled views — to the West the Sooke Hills, Inner Harbour, and Setting Sun, East to Beacon Hill Park and the Sea, South across the Straits of Juan de Fuca to the Olympic Mountains and North to the everchanging picture of the city itself.

Financing for the Lord and Lady Simcoe was provided by Montreal Trust — specialists in all types of Mortgage Financing.

FACTS OF SIMCOE LIVING

The lobbies are well appointed and complement the warm elegance of the suites. High-speed Otis Elevators soar to any floor in seconds. As you leave the elevator your eyes are deceived by the wall pattern which you are sure is wallpaper, but actually is another unique application by Art Churcher of A. & W. Painting. His use of Empress Paint throughout the building will please you with the choice of soft but bright hues. Thick aquamarine carpeting in the halls keeps noise to a whisper. Carpet here and the wall-to-wall carpet in every suite was laid by Verdiel Floors Ltd. of Victoria, whose capable crew laid the thousands of yards of material in record time. As you enter the suites where all walls have been sound-proofed with a double thickness of sound board by Double Duty Drywall of Vancouver, you have the feeling of pride and privacy. Generously proportioned kitchens with white ranges and refrigerators, dark walnut cabinets which were manufactured by Starcrest Manufacturing Co. Ltd., are the delight of all the housewives. Their use of arborite supplied by Arborite of Canada, on the counter tops will catch your eye. The highlight of the dining room is the crystal chandelier supplied by McLaren Electric Ltd., for years suppliers of better light fixtures in both Vancouver and Victoria. In every suite sun drapes have been expertly cut and sewn by Simpson Drapery & Awning Ltd. Second tracks for your own drapes are also installed by them if you wish. All closet doors and swinging doors in the kitchens were manufactured by C. T. Takahashi & Co., who supply their goods to several of Victoria's building supply firms. They also were the importers of the feature wall in the two-bedroom suites. Doug's Heating Co. Ltd. were responsible for supplying and installing all plumbing, heating and ventilating. A new type of hot-water heating, which does away with the old annoying cracking of pipes, is of special interest. In each suite is a direct control to the front door allowing each tenant to talk with his callers and let them in the building if he wishes. This inter-com system was installed by Cosmic Electronics of Victoria. Victoria Cablevision Ltd. has completely wired the building for perfect reception of black and white TV, color TV and FM radio.

The Lord and Lady Simcoe were the subject of a four-page write-up in the July issue of Vancouver Life Magazine. They are particularly proud of high-class development of this nature in the capital city, and they plan in the very near future to have a special magazine for the Victoria area covering Victoria life.

On the roof Smith & Anderson, Victoria's foremost roofers topped the Lord and Lady Simcoe with their bonded tar and gravel roof. Easy driving and parking on black-topped driveways done by OK Paving, who have spread thousands of yards of long-wearing black-topping.

For easy garden care the complete (almost block-long garden area) has been installed with automatic sprinklers by Victoria Lawn & Sprinklers Ltd. insuring proper care and watering. Long-life light bulbs from Certified Electric were the choice of the Simcoe management. These lights cut down maintenance costs and guarantee all areas to be properly lighted at all times. Acme Supplies Ltd., known for their prompt personal service, have supplied ashtrays and other items throughout the building. The long-term job of keeping the windows sparkling and the carpets clean has been taken on by Canadian Building Maintenance, whose quality over such large areas is almost unbelievable. Millwork and other building supplies were supplied by Moore Whittington who have outlets in Victoria, Nanaimo, Port Alberni and Campbell River. Laundry rooms equipped with the latest model Speed Queen appliances have been installed and are serviced by Speed Queen Services. The number of machines available allows residents to wash schedule-free.

All these features make Superintendent Bert Penner of C. J. Oliver, say with sincere pride: "Construction and finish of these new-buildings both say 'quality' in a quiet way."

THE SIMCOES' SWIMMING POOL

Relax beside B.C.'s largest apartment complex swimming pool, which is regularly maintained by Aqua Pacific Ltd., Victoria's leading swimming pool company.

The 82° pool is situated in the middle of a 9,000 square foot garden court yard, which is the focal point of Phillip Tattersfield and Associates, artistic landscaping. The stone wall and garden planting were expertly done by Peter Kimoff Landscaping of Victoria.

Sauna baths supplied by Sauna Products of North Vancouver have been housed in an attractive Swedish Cabanna situated just steps from the shallow end of the Simcoe pool.

Bar President Replies

'I'm Not Stirring Up Controversy'

No criticism of the Victoria City Police Commission was intended by Alan Macfarlane when he suggested a lawyer should be a member of that body, the Victoria Bar Association president said Saturday night.

Mr. Macfarlane said he did not want Mayor Thorne to think he was stirring up a controversy over the use of electronic listening devices in the Victoria police station.

When the mayor heard of the suggestion earlier, he said he took it as criticism.

BREAKDOWN
Not so, said Mr. Macfarlane: "It was just a positive suggestion. I thought it would help solve a few problems."

Mr. Macfarlane had blamed a breakdown in communications between the police and the bar association for lawyers not knowing of police listening techniques.

"I'm not trying to stir up a controversy," he said. "I just want to put the public record straight."

INTERCOM
Mr. Macfarlane was concerned about the possible presence of a microphone in the lawyers' consultation room, but has since had "a most satisfactory talk" with Police Chief J. F. Gregory. He was assured the lawyers' room is not bugged.

On one point the lawyer and the chief do not agree. Monitoring the intercom in the prisoners' visiting room is not justified, contends Mr. Macfarlane.

The chief believes otherwise, and there it will stay. But there will be a sign over it reading,

"Your conversation may be monitored."

The devices are to be discussed at a meeting Monday of the police commission.

"I'm prepared to talk it over with the mayor and to attend the police commission meeting if they want me to," Mr. Macfarlane said Saturday night.

"I just want to co-operate," he said. "The same goes for the bar association."

The controversy blew up last week when a report was published claiming the police station was bugged.

Mr. Macfarlane subsequently learned that the lawyers' interview room is not bugged. There are listening devices in the building but they were installed for security reasons.

It was like a picnic with placards. Everyone was smiling — with two exceptions — but the message was hard and clear.

The 1,000-plus pulp and paper workers at Harmac want nothing more to do with Local 655 of the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers.

They want Local 8 of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Workers to be their bargaining agent.

CROWD POLITE
To press their point, 800 workers brought their wives and children in a massive cavalcade Saturday from Nanaimo to the steps of Parliament Buildings.

They were an orderly, polite, happy crowd. They let their placards do their talking.

FIGHT URGED
"Puppets or Canadians?"

"Fight for the Right to be Free Canadians." "Do American Unions Control Our Labor Boards?" the placards asked.

The whole thing started last week when the Labor Relations Board rejected an application that Local 8 be the bargaining agent for the Harmac mill workers.

The Harmac people want the International decertified. They showed this in a petition signed by more than 1,000 of the Harmac workers.

POLICE ESCORT
The workers arrived in Victoria at about 1 p.m. and assembled at Centennial Square before marching down Douglas Street to the buildings with a police escort.

Angus McPhee, a vice-president of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada, described the parade as a "fine expression of solidarity."

NUMBERS INCREASED
Their numbers were boosted by men from Prince Rupert, Elk Falls, Crofton and Vancouver.

One of the speakers explained the crowd's feelings in one sentence: "We are not going to be forced into a union we have decided emphatically does not serve our needs."

TWO LOOKED
The non-smiling faces belonged to two members of the International.

Good-natured jests were aimed at the representatives who refused to identify themselves. They also refused to make any comment on the show of strength.

SPEECHES MADE
Naturally, speeches were made. They were all aimed at the same point — a Canadian union.

Two Men Still Missing From Capsized Boat

Fate dealt the right cards to a Victoria sports fisherman Friday when he became the lone survivor in a triple drowning mishap.

Cabel Singh Manhas, 3340 Whittier, owes his life to his being thrown out the opposite side of his 14-foot boat than were his three companions when the boat swamped and capsized off Sooke Harbor.

TWO MISSING
Only one of the three had been found by Saturday night.

The body of Wilfred A. Christie, 53, of 6484 Goldridge Avenue, Sooke, was washed up in the kelp beds of Secretary Island.

The two men still missing are Percy Kabel, 27, of Calgary, and Kenneth MacDonald, 15, of Ruskin, B.C.

The four men had set out for an afternoon's fishing from the Sooke marina about 11 a.m., and had intended to put in 18 holes of golf after the trip.

Later as the boat was heading for Secretary Island, also known as Donaldson Island, waves washed over the stern and submerged the outboard motor.

"The next thing I knew, I was alone in the water," Mr. Manhas said. "They were calling and so was I."

"The last I saw of them, they were all clinging to the overturned boat."

CARRIED AWAY
He said he tried to swim to the boat, but the wind and tide carried him toward the island.

The lone survivor said his legs were too cold to swim, and he doesn't remember how he got to shore, but he remembers fighting his way through the kelp bed off Secretary Island.

"I went along the island in search of the other three, and I also tried to attract the attention of passing boats, but I couldn't," he said.

FALLS ASLEEP
A slight rain started to fall, and Mr. Manhas tried to find shelter among the rocks.

"I had almost fallen asleep when I heard (marina operator) Art Bailey's boat. A few minutes later, he was rescued."

"I was never so pleased to see anyone in all my life," he said.

Promoted

Lt.-Col. G. G. Brown, who was commanding officer of 1st Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry at Work Point and took battalion to Germany in December, 1963, has been promoted to rank of colonel. He has been appointed chief of infantry at Mobile Command Headquarters in Longueuil, Que., where he has been staff officer of infantry since September, 1963.

Socialists Choose Carpenter

Larry Tickner, a 35-year-old carpenter, will contest Victoria constituency for the Socialist Party of Canada in the Sept. 12 provincial election.

Mr. Tickner, 589 Nora Place, announced Saturday that he was nominated earlier in the week by the Victoria branch of the party. It will be his first election campaign, he said.

He will make his first campaign speech at 2:30 p.m. today at Speakers' Corner in Beacon Hill Park.

McCormack Wins Tennis Tournament

COWICHAN BAY — Friday night the South Cowichan Lawn Tennis Club entertained visitors with a supper, fireside singing and dancing, before the big day of the tournament.

An upset of Saturday's matches occurred when Art Fish sprained his ankle and had to default to Don McCormick.

President of the club Jeff Hunter said "It was a most gratifying tournament from the point of view of the club, with old friends and players from all over."

The round-up for the tournament is:

Hedi Jackson, Portland, received first prize in the ladies singles, Pam Hunter, Vancouver, second.

In the ladies doubles Pam Hunter and Natalie Rogers both of Vancouver got first prize and Ardice Savard, Vancouver and Laverne Volovich also of Vancouver placed second.

Don McCormick, Victoria, was first in the men's open singles and Art Fish, Portland, and Art Jeffrey and Vic Rollins both from Vancouver, were second.

Hedi and Jim Jackson were the top players in the mixed doubles and Laverne and Jack Volovich of Victoria were second.

In the senior men's singles, Righty Eden, Seattle, was first and Earl Brooks, Klamath Falls, came second.

In the senior doubles Jim Bardsley and Colin Walker both of Vancouver came first and Jack Churchill and Ed Kemble also of Vancouver were second.

Swim Race Today

Saanich's Diamond Jubilee marathon swim will start at 2 p.m. today at Elk Lake.

The first event will be a 200-yard swim for boys and girls under 12, followed by a swim for boys under 16, on a course from Eagle Beach to Harpsterley Beach.

The open swim will be from Harpsterley, around the lake to finish near the starting point. The distance is equal to the original course from Beaver Lake to Harpsterley Beach to Beaver Lake, called off because of weeds choking the channel between the two lakes.

After the marathon swim, Colanist swim class instructor Margie Naysmith will be honored by the municipality for her work over the years in teaching Greater Victoria youngsters.

The fishing derby was won by Jack Lowe who caught a 27-pound salmon.

Student Actors Strut Their Stuff

Set for Camus play opening Monday at Phoenix Theatre was built entirely by students under direction of Wolfgang Baba. Working from plans students hammered and sawed to build levels and properties needed for this production.

University Theatre Workshop

State of Siege Session Climax

By WILLIAM THOMAS

Title of the Albert Camus play to be presented as climax to University of Victoria's Summer Theatre Workshop has taken on a special meaning for director Robert Hedley.

State of Siege describes the situation, Mr. Hedley finds himself in as a result of negotiations to present the North American premiere of this Camus play at the Phoenix Theatre on campus. Through her New York representatives, Famous Agencies, the author's widow has issued explicit instructions that the play must not be advertised or reviewed by theatre critics.

Obey-or-Else

Madame Camus wired her instructions from Paris insisting that State of Siege shun commercialism.

No specific reasons were given for the conditions but Mr. Hedley was told if he did not comply he would not be allowed to present the play.

Filling Gap

Presentation will climax a six-week course in acting, stagecraft and design at the Phoenix Theatre.

Mr. Hedley explained: "The course has helped fill a gap in the school program where students can get very little formal training in theatre."

Questioned about the possibility of overlapping the work done by the Bastion Theatre Studio, Mr. Hedley explained: "Bastion does an excellent job of training young actors for community theatre. Our program is directed primarily toward educational theatre. The two aims should not be compared. They are both worthwhile, just different."

Wrote Schools

Though most of the students at the theatre workshop are from high schools a number are teachers of drama in the school system.

Early in the year Mr. Hedley wrote each high school in the province asking if any students were interested and inviting applications for 20 scholarships offered by the University of Victoria.

To the suggestion that summer courses might lack the strength of regular programs Mr. Hedley retorted "Not necessarily. In the theatre it is often possible to get professional instructors whose contract is for the winter session only. Joseph K. Rider, our designer, is such a person."

Mr. Rider, who has offered both theoretical and workshop training, works as a designer for the Fort Wayne Civic Theatre.

No Illusions

Robert Hedley has no illusions about just how much a student can pick up in a short course.

"If you expect a two-week acting course to make you an actor you will be disappointed," he explained. "What a short course in acting should do is show the actor how to prepare himself for the stage, and the same is true of stagecraft and design."

Why did Mr. Hedley choose the Albert Camus play State of Siege? This is a play about war and totalitarianism.

The director explained his choice this way:

"These are things that most kids of today worry about. The play's sweeping lines and its idealistic quality will appeal to the students, I think, if only because young people seem to be more at home than their parents in a world whose colors are just a little bit brighter than life."

Course Bargain

On a more mundane level there is still the question of cost.

Mr. Hedley says the course is a bargain and has worked out the tuition cost at 66 cents an hour. And with 20 scholarships already established, most talented students who want to attend can find their way into classes.

Entire proceeds of the week-long run of State of Siege will go into the University of Victoria's scholarship fund for summer theatre students.

Gail Bigsby fits costume intended for actor playing part of Diego in Camus play. Geoffrey Murray models costume for fitting. Students worked from designs prepared by Joseph Rider, instructor from Fort Wayne, Iowa, Civic Theatre.

Stagecraft class included practical instruction in handling tools and building properties. Betty Reintz builds parts for cart used in State of Siege under direction of instructor Wolfgang Baba.

There's a new suit at Wilson's that's downright beautiful . . . the perfect "bride's suit" in our opinion . . . and a heavenly outfit to start a honeymoon in . . . It's a delicate oyster French crepe with matching Persian lamb collar and cuffs . . . double-breasted, with curving welt seam detailing . . . Looks very light weight, but in reality, it's quite warm enough for street wear in the fall . . . It's a size 10 (and of course there's no law that says you have to be a bride to own this elegant suit!) . . . Another beauty is oatmeal tweed with blond beaver collar and cuffs . . . double-breasted, as so many of the new season's suits are . . . A very distinctive two-piece suit is of printed alpaca in tones of olive and grey . . . highlighted with a narrow satin trim . . . Simply yet subtly styled . . . Looks lovely on, we're told . . . A fourth suit we considered very handsome and practical, is a quite heavy-weight tweed in a check, camel and white mix . . . Double-breasted, with soft opossum lapelled collar and cuffs . . . size 14 . . . All these fur-trimmed suits have slim straight skirts . . . are meant for street wear sans overcoat . . . And frankly, we can't think of anything more elegant to stride along in on Autumn days! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 222-7177.

How to be the best dressed gal on campus . . .

When August's here can school be far away? . . . Wise gals are laying their wardrobe plans now for high school and college days ahead . . . and judging by what we hear . . . sweaters, skirts and blouses are the most wanted items . . . Not just any old skirts and sweaters, mind you . . . but those with verve and flair and a sophisticated look . . . the kind we saw at the Madam and Eve Shop this week . . . right out of the New Yorker! . . . They're by Ladybug . . . Classic pullovers, ribbon-fronted cardigans with crew neck, saddle shoulders . . . Cardinal, butter-cream and glen green . . . Dye-to-match skirts are a herringbone weave wool . . . A-line and shortie . . . The blouses, plain or with a small floral design, are of the same colors . . . Some have jewel neckline, tucked front and short sleeves . . . others are long-sleeved and sport a little collar . . . A combination of skirt, pullover, blouse and cardigan would almost make a school wardrobe in itself . . . but to glid the lily, there are matching socks (patterned with the Ladybug motif) . . . also matching stockings of stretch nylon lace . . . Can't you just picture the ensemble? . . . so if you'd like to cut a dash on campus this fall, go see them at . . . Madam and Eve, Trouce Alley, 222-7177.

Destination: Moskov! . . .

Let's say you've done Europe . . . maybe several times . . . and now you want to broaden your travel horizons . . . see something entirely different . . . observe open doors that for many years have been firmly closed against the outside world . . . The place to go is Eastern Europe . . . countries like Yugoslavia with its hundreds of beautiful beaches along the sunny Adriatic coast . . . Czechoslovakia, the ancient Bohemia of legend . . . Rumania . . . proud Poland and romantic Hungary . . . Bulgaria . . . Russia! . . . Just lately all these Eastern European countries have started to open up and are now welcoming tourists . . . restrictions have eased tremendously . . . Paulin's have a wealth of information about travel in Eastern Europe . . . picturesque illustrations of brochures describing the many tours available . . . either conducted or independent . . . They'll do all your booking for you . . . obtain your passport and necessary visas . . . help you plan the most interesting holiday of your lifetime! . . . Just think of it . . . next year you could be cruising down the blue Danube from Vienna to one of the Black Sea resorts . . . Applauding the Bolshevik on its natural terrain . . . Viewing places of strange and unimagined beauty . . . landmarks of historic splendor . . . Drop in for full information from . . . George Paulin Travel Service, 1006 Government St., 222-9188.

Put the glory back in your crowning glory . . .

We were talking to Danny Hajnal at the House of Glamour last week about the peculiar way so many heads of hair . . . including ours . . . seem to react to summertime . . . It's a common complaint and what we need, says Danny, is a conditioning treatment NOW . . . to counteract the effects of salt water, chlorine in pools, and direct sunshine . . . This will restore softness and lustre, as well as leave a protective coating on the hair . . . House of Glamour has different kinds of conditioning treatments for the various types of hair (fine, coarse, bleached, etc.) . . . so if planned to cure the ravages of too much fun in the sun . . . so if your hair's getting summer weary, treat yourself to a treatment at H of G . . . Here's advice direct from Danny, too: always wear a hat or some kind of head covering in the sun . . . remember that excessive heat will dry out the hair ends, so use a conditioner . . . And here's advice from us: why not get a cute short summer haircut at H of G? They do it superlatively well . . . There'll be very little upkeep . . . no backcombing . . . and your hair will always look reasonably decent after swimming . . . The short cut will last you through the rest of the summer . . . then come fall, your locks will be in fine shape for your new permanent . . . House of Glamour, 658 View St., 226-4188.

A unique exhibition which will interest many in Victoria will be open to the public at the Douglas Room, Hudson's Bay, August 18 to Sept. 2.

The artistic efforts of some 650 Indian school children throughout British Columbia have been brought together for a centennial contest under the chairmanship of Mr. A. L. Cartier of the Indian Schools Centennial Sub-committee, Community Programs Branch of the Department of Education.

Club

DAUGHTERS OF ENGLAND
Daughters of England will hold a tea at 1:30 p.m., August 17 at the Orange Hall, 1620 Fernwood Road.

Indian students in day, residential, parochial and provincial schools have submitted carvings, paintings, masks, and handicrafts as well as copies of legends and original stories.

The purpose of the contest is to encourage Indian youth to be aware of their own cultural contribution to Canada and to reassure young Indians that they have a heritage that is worthy of respect.

It is also designed to help Indians participate more fully in the 1966-67 centennial celebrations.

There is $1,000 to be given in prizes.

Cutler, Alberni; Mr. D. J. L. Anderson, Deep Cove Art Centre and Mrs. G. Neville of Duncan.

The B.C. Indian Arts and Welfare Society under the chairmanship of Miss E. V. Prang will sponsor the exhibition to be opened at 2:30 p.m. Thursday by Mr. L. J. Wallace, general chairman, Centennial Committee.

Members of the Society, aided by young Indian girls in native dress will serve tea at the opening and also provide guides each day during the exhibition.

There will be a display of the late Mungo Martin's work to bring attention to his memorial scholarship fund which will give its first award this fall. Through courtesy of The Bay donations from the silver collection will go to this fund.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: My husband and I have been married for seven years. We get along fine but something about Tom bothers me and I would like to know if I am being silly.

When we are with other couples, Tom says to one of the men, "Why don't you hug Elde?" Or when we're out bowling he'll suggest that one of the fellows give me a big squeeze for luck.

The other evening we were playing with neighbors and Tom said, "Whoever wins the pot gets to make Elde in the kitchen and give her a big kiss." Everyone laughed but I don't think he was kidding.

Most husbands would be mad at another man tried to hug his wife. My husband seems to encourage it. Please tell me what to do. — BAF-FLED.

Dear Baf: Tell Tom not to offer you around as a good luck charm, a card prize or anything else. Such remarks make him look to all the world like a heel. If he does it again make it clear that he is not speaking for you and tell him to cut the comedy.

Dear Ann: Your reply to "Too Beautiful" was cruel. I am the "Too Beautiful," and I can tell you it's horrible to go through life with a face and figure that men just after and women fear. When I was in high school the boys were afraid to ask me out. They assumed I was always dated up. No one wanted to risk being rejected. I sat home

Mainland Wedding

A wedding of wide interest both in Victoria and on the mainland took place in Vancouver Saturday afternoon when Miss Anita Noakes became the bride of Dennis William Gornall, North Vancouver.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth E. Noakes of North Vancouver and the groom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. William A. Gornall, 2077 Townley Street, Victoria.

Standard baskets of pink roses and white lilac decorated St. Andrew's and St. Stephen's Presbyterian Church, North Vancouver, for the service at which Rev. J. Brown Milne officiated. During the ceremony, Mrs. Henry Romain sang Handel's "Where E'er You Walk."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a traditionally styled gown of silk, fashionably with a bouffant belled skirt. Sleeves ended in tiny points. A trim of Chantilly lace accented the wattleau train which swept back to chapel length. A crystal tiara held her floor-length veil and she carried a crescent bouquet of pink roses and stephanotis, starred with seed pearls.

Miss Shirley Thompson, Victoria, was maid of honor, and Mrs. F. Basart, Vancouver, was bridesmatron in floor-length gowns of pink lace and peau d'elephant, styled on empire lines. Pink carnations and ivy were in their bouquets.

John Gornall was best man for his brother. Ushering guests were Blaine Scott and Hans Basart.

Don Creighton proposed the toast to his niece at the reception following in the Courthouse Gardens, North Vancouver.

The petite, fair haired bride, given in marriage by her brother, Mr. John Heisterman, was lovely in her gown of candlelight silk peau de sole overlayed with guipure lace.

The empire style bodice had a scooped neckline and the skirt swept into a full cathedral train.

California Honeymoon

The bride, the former Sharon Marie Harding, is the daughter of Gordon William Harding, Victoria, and the late Mrs. Harding. The groom's parents are Mr. and Mrs. George W. Reid, 3031 Washington Avenue.

The Cathedral was decorated with arrangements of white gladioli and pink carnations for the service at which Fr. W. Kennedy officiated. Mr. Harding gave his daughter in marriage and John Lenaghan was organist.

The lace-covered bodice of the bride's floor-length empire-line gown of silk crepe featured three-quarter-length sleeves, fashioned with full puffed cuffs. Lace also formed the cape train. Accents of pearls trimmed the four-tier scalloped veil which misted from a floral headpiece and she carried a bouquet of pink Rapture roses and white carnations. Jewelry was the groom's gifts of a pearl necklace and earrings.

Her attendants, matron of honor, Mrs. J. Donaldson, and bridesmaid, Miss Cathy Brown, were in floor-length gowns of pink silk crepe, which they accented with matching headpieces. Pink and white carnations were in their bouquets. Mrs. Donaldson wore a gold brooch and Miss Brown, a drop pearl necklace, the bride's gifts.

Best man was Allen Nelson and ushers were Ken Matten and Andrew Davidson.

A heart-shaped three-tier wedding cake centred the head table at the reception which followed in the Upper Terrace home of the bride's foster parents, Dr. and Mrs. C. Y.

Brown. Dr. Brown proposed the toast to the bride.

For travelling on honeymoon, the new Mrs. Reid donned a three-piece suit of pink, which she complemented with a matching hat and white accessories.

Travelling from out-of-town for the wedding were Mrs. C. M. Harding, Saskatoon; Mrs. H. Schofield, Edmonton, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Seiben of Prince Rupert.

Five Instructors Real Leaders

Visitors See Colonist Free Swim Classes

By MARGIE NAYSMITH

Parents of our young swimmers came out to Elk Lake in crowds during visitors' week at the Colonist free swim classes.

While I chatted with the folks, their youngsters were safe in the hands of the finest group of teen-age instructors I've had in years.

They are Marilyn Mair, Alisa Lendrum, Heather Gibney, Jimmy Monroe and Ross Duncan. If all teen-agers were like the kids working for me, what a wonderful world this would be.

I've always had good instructors but this time I've got five leaders, which is most unusual in a group of five. They all have leadership ability. They take hold and go right ahead and do things without being told.

All of them have a great interest in children. I can't say enough for them. Then there's my daughter, Marilyn Cann, whom I could-

Teen-Ager

Quality Control Exciting

By KITTE TURMELL

Quality control can be your key to unlock opportunity in business, science, industry. Just what is it? Why do you hear so much about it at "top brain" conferences? When, where and how can you use it, starting as a student or part-time worker?

For answers go with me, to Anaheim, Calif. Check in for a Joint Technical Conference, and an interview with E. J. (Jack) Lancaster, past president of the American Society for Quality Control.

He squeezed time to brief these clues for young people:

"What's quality control? In a business and professional sense it's a field in which you begin by working with marketing people. You start with one basic question: What is product quality? It is a combination of what the customer wants or needs and how much he is willing to pay for his wants or needs."

DEFECTS

"Why is it important? It is estimated that over $35,000,000 are spent annually on quality control which includes the cost of scrap, rework, of failures because of its lack."

"The quality control man examines work to detect defects in products before they are delivered to the customer. He plays a very important role in the elimination of defects and deficiencies before they occur. This latter phase is the prevention effort accomplished by the quality control engineer. The quality control man can be a professional in the truest sense. But to be so considered by his fellow men, he must contribute something significant to the welfare of society."

"Anyone who has ever sat out a power failure in the darkened room for hours, because of a defective circuit breaker has a good idea of what a quality control man can do."

"Anyone seeking a career in the field will find it exciting to assume new roles as the conscience of his employer and the representative of the consumer. The quality control man can study for such specialized fields as drugs, food, transportation, missiles, etc. Whatever optimum quality at the lowest specialty he selects, his goal is possible price commensurate with safety."

TRAINING

"How can a teen-ager prepare for a career in the field? He starts out by learning basic facts in his field of interest — engineering, manufacturing, or whatever it is. He may do this through his college education or he may join a quality control staff, after going through a training-within-industry program in a particular company."

"In quality control work, he deals with facts. The news he passes on to his boss or fellow worker may not be welcome or cheerful. But it must be factual and diplomacy in delivery helps. 'Never say a thing is no good. Too much personal pride of others is at stake. Say for example: 'This is good but it isn't exactly what is needed.' Be considerate. Remember, influencing people. You must and in school. For Kite Turmell's free, fact-packed booklet "Learn to Spell," send a self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request, care of this newspaper. Kite's booklet gives practical pointers from top educators on how to improve to make progress — on the job your spelling."

ALERTNESS

Be alert for errors. The earlier you can catch a mistake, the less it will cost and the less it will affect the production schedule. Courage is what it takes to go ahead, in the quality business that is not necessarily a business for making friends and

Here are the ABC's of Jack Lancaster suggests: Always remember that the rewards for low cost and meeting a schedule are immediate. The rewards for good quality may be deferred, but they will be remembered much longer. Plan ahead. The prime objective is to prevent defects from occurring in the first place.

Teen Letters

Let Fellow Know You Like Him

"Dear Kite Turmell: You went out. — Two Desperate Teen-Agers".
Parents of our young swimmers came out to Elk Lake in crowds during visitors' week at the Colonist free swim classes.

While I chatted with the folks, their youngsters were safe in the hands of the finest group of teen-age instructors I've had in years.

They are Marilyn Mair, Alisa Lendrum, Heather Gibney, Jimmy Monroe and Ross Duncan. If all teen-agers were like the kids working for me, what a wonderful world this would be.

I've always had good instructors but this time I've got five leaders, which is most unusual in a group of five. They all have leadership ability. They take hold and go right ahead and do things without being told.

All of them have a great interest in children. I can't say enough for them. Then there's my daughter, Marilyn Cann, whom I couldn't get along without. She meets the buses, calls the roll, looks for lost shoes and lost children and shepherds them back to the bus.

Her children, Stacey, 3, and Jayson, 18 months, have become the mascots of the swim classes. All the children know them and they sit and listen intently to the lessons over the loudspeaker.

Indians Rescue Hikers from Rugged Utah Canyon

PAGE, Ariz. (AP) — Two Indians and a white trader rescued five stranded hikers the last of 26 — from a narrow, treacherous canyon of southern Utah late Friday night.

The others from a school in Colorado made their way to a Navajo trading post 24 hours earlier.

A girl in the party, Margaret Donnan, 17, of Columbus, Ohio, collapsed Wednesday after the group became lost near Navajo Mountain, a few miles north of the Arizona-Utah state line. She was reported suffering from severe exhaustion.

Another student and three teachers of the Rocky Mountain School at Carbondale, Colo., stayed beside the girl while 15 other students and teachers found a trading post where their hike began.

A day earlier, six youths in the party returned to the post to report the others were lost and needed food and water.

Some food was dropped to them by airplanes.

Most members of the group suffered from foot blisters and sore legs. Miss Donnan was put to bed under sedation.

The group plans to resume its trip today in two trucks left at the trading post.

It was only 14 miles "as the water flows" from Rainbow Lodge where Navajo officers Dennis Manuelito and Ambrose McCabe found the five left behind. Manuelito reported by radio.

"They were happy to see our five horses," he said.

Bleeding, Burned

Toddlers Tied Up

HOUSTON, Tex. (AP) — It looked like any other garage when the deputy drove up Friday. But he decided to open it anyway.

He lifted the door and found two tiny, frightened girls, unclothed, their hands tied behind their scarred backs. No water or food was in sight.

Patricia Ann Johnson, 4, and her sister, Frances Johnson, 6, were released from their bonds — a woman's long yellow belt that had been cut in two — and rushed to Ben Taub Hospital. Doctors said Patricia had bruises, cuts and scars covering about 70 per cent of her body. Her hands were swollen twice their normal size. She was burned on her right foot and toes. Her condition was described as fair.

Frances had many bruises and cuts, the hospital reported, but she was not as seriously injured as her sister and later was transferred to the Harris County Children's Home.

Lawrence Fillmore, a reserve sheriff's deputy, who discovered the youngsters, said he had heard gossip about the children from residents of the northwest Harris County area and decided to make a check.

Fillmore and other deputies said dried blood from open wounds covered the belt that bound the children. Neighbors told the officers the girls had been left in the garage from eight to nine hours a day for several weeks.

Sheriff's deputies arrested the girls' aunt and uncle a few hours later. Held in county jail in lieu of $41,600 bond were Matthew Childress, 45, a laborer, and his wife, Emma Lee Childress, 32, a maid.

Each was charged on two counts of false imprisonment and two counts of aggravated assault on a minor.

A woman who identified herself as the children's mother, Martha Gibbs of Houston, said that she left the two girls with

Blaze Kills Aged

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Twenty-nine elderly men died and 12 others were injured Saturday night in a fire at a Salvation Army home for the destitute.

Police said it was the heaviest death toll from a single building blaze in Australia's history.

Chief Fire Officer John Patterson said the fire, which raced through the top floor of the four-story building, probably was caused by an electrical fault or by someone smoking in bed.

Police said many of the victims died of asphyxiation. Others were thought to have died from heart attacks.

Hostel booking clerk Edward Reid said he was on the fourth floor shortly before 11 p.m. when he noticed flames licking the doorway of a room. He turned in an alarm and ambulances and fire units were on the scene in downtown Melbourne in minutes.

But flames caught many of the elderly, frail residents as they slept or lay on their beds in their fourth-floor cubicles.

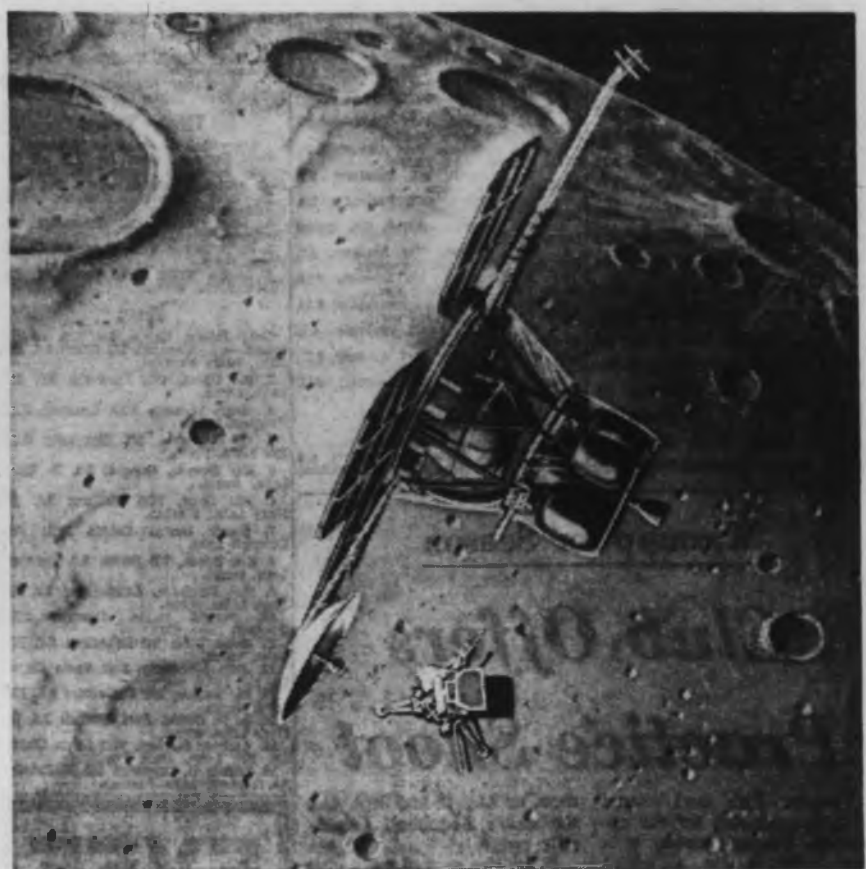

Police found 10 men, eight of them dead, huddled in one cubicle where they sought safety.

Shaken survivors told a story of panic.

"The lights went out. Some of us were reading. Others were asleep. Some were walking down the corridors. Others were trapped in lavatories," said one.

He added: "Everyone seemed to be going the wrong way. Shouts and screams could be heard everywhere as men scrambled for doorways."

"It was a terrible smoke seemed to fill the place within seconds. It's amazing more of us weren't trapped."

Primary target for Orbiter photo probe is site where Surveyor 1 soft-landed on moon. Surveyor's solar panels have been positioned so their shadow catches Orbiter's photographic eye.

In Orbit Today

Moon Probe Locks On Guiding Star

By JOSEPH A. ST. AMANT PASADENA, Calif. — Lunar Orbiter, headed toward a picture-taking date with the moon, Saturday solved the problem that has plagued its otherwise successful voyage by finding its chief navigational reference point — the star Canopus.

The spacecraft was scheduled to go into orbit around the moon at 8:23 a.m. Victoria time today.

After its launch Wednesday, the flying photography laboratory failed to lock onto Canopus with its star tracker. But scientists at Jet Propulsion Laboratory said the tracker found the star Saturday.

Although scientists used the craft's inertial guidance system, controlled from JPL, to keep the star within the craft's vision, they said they felt confident that eventually the star tracker, which follows the star automatically, "would eventually do everything it was supposed to do."

A spokesman said project officials were encouraged by the tracker locating the star.

He said: "The failure to lock onto Canopus was the one problem that has bothered us throughout the mission."

The moon itself was used as a substitute navigational reference point for Canopus in a critical midcourse correction manoeuvre Thursday.

As a result of the manoeuvre, the Orbiter was speeding on such an accurate path toward the moon that scientists scribbled plans for a second manoeuvre to further correct its course.

"Orbiter will be within 50 miles of the aiming point of the moon, and we consider that pretty good," a spokesman said. "A second midcourse correction will not be necessary."

To place the spacecraft in orbit, retro-rockets were to be fired this morning when the Orbiter nears the moon. This will slow its velocity so that it can be caught by the moon's gravitational pull and eased into orbit.

Project manager Clifford H. Nelson said: "We have considerable confidence that we will be able substantially to accomplish our original photographic objectives."

As the windmill-shaped spacecraft orbits around the moon, it will snap pictures of the lunar landscape in an attempt to find smooth landing sites for the manned Apollo moonships.

The Orbiter also will photograph the amazingly successful Surveyor 1 spacecraft which soft-landed on the moon and will get a glimpse of the mysterious backside of the moon.

Officials said the spacecraft's initial orbital path would be approximately 1,150 miles at its apogee and 120 miles at its perigee.

Later, retro rockets will be fired to lower the orbital path to as close to 18 miles from the lunar surface.

Marines Gun Crowd

JAKARTA (Reuters) — Panicky marines poured a hail of stungun bullets into a rioting crowd at a soccer match in this Indonesian capital Friday night, killing an army major and injuring dozens of persons.

Women and children were trampled underfoot as some 40,000 fans panicked and scattered for the exits when the stunguns sprayed the arena.

PLAYERS FIGHT

The violence erupted during a match between Bandung and Surabaya, West and East Java teams, when they met in Jakarta's gigantic sports stadium in a round of the national soccer championship.

Fighting broke out among the players after two fouls on the Bandung team, which was leading 1-0.

FIGHTING SPREADS

The fighting spread to the crowd and some marines around the perimeter fired several warning shots.

Eyewitnesses said a soldier in the crowd, believing he was being fired on, shot at the marines. They panicked and turned a blast of automatic fire toward the crowd.

Movie Star Charged In Death

LUCCA, Italy (AP) — Movie star William Holden has been charged with manslaughter following an automobile accident. The prosecutor in Lucca said Saturday it was up to the examining magistrate to determine whether Holden, 48, must stand trial. He added that in the meantime Holden was free to travel anywhere he wished.

Holden was at the wheel of a small sports car July 26 when it was in collision with another small car driven by Giorgio Valerio, 42. Valerio died on the way to a hospital. Holden was unhurt.

The American actor has been vacationing in Italy. He could not be reached for comment.

Nuclear Plant Key Factor

KENNEWICK, Wash. (AP) — Electrical power from the Hanford nuclear steam plant may determine this winter whether the Bonneville Power Administration will have to curtail power to industrial customers.

Donald J. Harris, BPA assistant manager, indicated any curbing of power will depend on the flow of Pacific Northwest rivers. If the flow is average or better the BPA will be able to keep up electrical load demands. But if it drops, some of the interruptible power will have to be cut, Harris said.

King Fisherman

Few Tye Caught in July

King fishermen found slim pickings on the tye grounds during July — only eight were weighed in throughout the month.

The largest, a 45-pounder caught in the Tye pool, earned a gold prince button for S. A. Klepper of Coombs.

It took a 32-pound spring (chinnok) salmon to win a prince button during July; a 9.9-pound coho; a 4.11-pound lake trout; an 8.4-pounder in the river trout steelhead or rainbow category; a 4.8-pounder in the river trout other than steelhead or rainbow, and a four-pound bass.

OTHER WINNERS

Other gold prince button winners for July were:

Dave Beulah, 1430 Fairfield — a 44-pound spring caught off Discovery Island on a strip teaser.

R. A. Raincock, Seattle — 15.3-pound coho caught off Sooke on a minnow.

Dave Whiskin, Lake Cowichan — 14.1-pound steelhead in the Nisquam River.

E. H. Sutherland of Duncan — an 11.9-pound brown trout in the Cowichan River caught on a fly.

L. Kennedy, 182 Obed — a five-pound bass at Elk Lake, caught on a crazy crawler.

Daily Proposed

Liberals Veto Paper

SASKATOON (CP) — The western Liberal conference Saturday rejected a proposal that the federal government introduce a publicly-supported daily national newspaper.

The proposal was submitted to a panel discussion on communications and transportation by Ian Nicol, Edmonton school teacher and president of an Edmonton Liberal constituency association.

MINOR SUPPORT

The motion received only minor support, it was learned. A second could at first not be found, and was finally selected from the panel primarily, officials said, because of previous publicity given to the proposed newspaper.

The proposal now will not be taken before an open session of the conference.

GREATER DEPTH

Mr. Nicol, speaking for his Edmonton group, said in a prepared brief that the daily national newspaper would provide coverage of important national issues in greater depth than is provided by present privately-owned newspapers.

Such a newspaper, he suggested, would be controlled by an autonomous public body. The brief suggested a need for additional news paper viewpoints, especially in the major Prairie cities where only one daily is now published.

The brief did not name the cities, but Edmonton, Saskatoon and Regina each have only one newspaper.

Voters Not Moved

PRINCE ALBERT (CP) — There is no suggestion on the Prairies that recent conferences of Liberal and NDP groups have brought any change in public opinion, opposition leader Diefenbaker said Saturday.

He said that during his four weeks in the West, "meeting and talking with people" he has found the feeling for his party "stronger than at the time of the last election."

Mr. Diefenbaker said the Western Liberal conference at Saskatoon this weekend was a case of "loud roars of demanding action turning to the cooing of doves."

Remains Found Of 80 Soldiers

TOKYO (Reuters) — The remains of about 80 Japanese soldiers who committed suicide in the closing stages of the Second World War have been found in a trench in Okinawa. They were traced by Matsushiro Suda, 60, a former signals officer in the Japanese Imperial Army. He said he was with the men when they retreated after a battle with U.S. troops in May, 1945.

Golfers Co-operate

'Just Went Crazy'

Mutiny Sparked By Homesickness

BALBOA, Canal Zone (UPI) — An infectious case of homesickness on the high seas caused the mutiny among the Chinese crew on the super-tanker Charles E. Wilson, the captain and the chief engineer agreed Saturday. Just what happened remained a mystery.

The Wilson, which sent distress calls Tuesday reporting a mutiny aboard and requesting assistance, docked here Friday. Four seamen were taken into custody at the captain's request.

After a day or arrests, conferences, interrogations and rampant confusion, a total of seven crew members had left the ship. Officials said they still had no idea what actually happened on the Liberian-registered ship.

Body Hauled From Fraser

FORT LANGLEY (CP) — The body of William Lyle Armstrong, 62, of Fort Langley was found in the Fraser River a mile and a half east of here. A fisherman, he was last seen when he went to check his boat moored at a nearby wharf.

Man Discovers Swim Costly

VANCOUVER (CP) — Luigi Losacco told police a sad tale here. Dared by three women, he took an early-morning swim at a Stanley Park beach. When he came out of the water the women were gone. So was his wallet, containing $300 and a $500 cheque.

Pants Like Points—Both Lost

CAPE GIRARDEAU, Mo. — Attorney R. P. Smith had a very bad day in court. He lost his case and he lost his pants. While making a point to the jury in an automobile accident case, Smith suddenly found his pants reposed at half staff.

He paused long enough to pull them up. The jury, however, found his defendant guilty. He described it "a most embarrassing situation on both counts."

LOS ANGELES — An attorney for actress Betty Lamm has filed a $3,000,000 claim against the city, charging the actress was arrested falsely by police on charges of shoplifting. Attorney Jordan Wank alleged Miss Lamm suffered "emotional distress, loss of earnings, loss of reputation and good name."

HYANNIS, Mass. — John F. Kennedy Jr. underwent successful surgery at Cape Cod Hospital for removal of his tonsils. "Everything went very smoothly," a hospital spokesman said. "His condition is good."

CRANBROOK — Premier Bennett was named Chief White Eagle by the Kootenay Indian tribe during Sam Steele celebrations. Earlier, the premier rode in a 100-entry parade, the largest ever held in the East Kootenays, watched by an estimated 12,000 persons.

BATLEY, England — Police in Great Britain have asked citizens to "have a go" and tackle would-be crooks. Mrs. Lymne took their advice when she saw a man creeping into her bedroom. She jumped out of bed and delivered a roundhouse right hook to his eye. The burglar fled. Mrs. Lymne is 73.

ROME — Elizabeth Taylor wore a foot cast here after suffering a fracture on the big toe. The actress fell while attending the Taormina Film Festival in Sicily last weekend.

LE PUY, France — Henri Bechthold stepped onto a highway cable, suspended 1,200 feet over a gorge near here with plans to stay on it 200 hours. The record to beat would be his own — 150 hours on the same cable set earlier this year.

Law and the Driver

Many motorists are not aware of the changes of the B.C. Motor Vehicle Act. For their benefit, the Victoria Chapter of Canadian Traffic Safety Committee has prepared a list of traffic regulations with explanations where needed.

Not included are clauses which refer specifically to professional drivers.

SECTION 168 At Traffic Signal

Where traffic-control signals are operating at an intersection, pedestrians shall comply with them in the manner provided in section 128.

Comment

The strict adherence of pedestrians to Traffic Control Signals particularly in areas where traffic is concentrated helps to speed up traffic and ensure the safety of both pedestrians and motorists.

Pedestrian

A pedestrian is a person afoot or an invalid or a child in a wheel chair or carriage.

Crosswalk

A crosswalk is:

- Any portion of a roadway at an intersection or else where distinctly indicated for pedestrians crossing by signs or by lines or other markings on the surface.
- That portion of a highway at an intersection that is included within the extension of the lateral lines of the sidewalk.

Mites Sicken Ivy

By M. V. CHESNUT

Sick Ivy (H. W. S. Duncan) — The sick gray look of the ivy covering your house wall is probably due to an infestation of spider mites, very small sap-sucking insects. Spray thoroughly now with a good miticide such as Kelthane, aramite or malathion, and in future years spray twice, first in late June and again in mid-July.

Early next spring, before new growth starts, try "brushing" your vine with a bamboo rake. Leaves which have been badly weakened and disfigured by the mites should separate easily from the vine, while those of a good green color will stay on.

Hydrangeas from slips (A. E. W. Victoria) — August is about the best month to take and root cuttings from a hydrangea. Use the tips of well ripened shoots of this year's growth, between four and six inches long. Make your cut immediately below a leaf joint and remove the lower leaves. Moisten the base of the slip, dip it in a hormone rooting powder, and insert in a pot filled with a mixture of equal parts peat moss and vermiculite, well mixed. Keep only just barely moist, never sloppy wet. The pot may stand in a shaded cold-frame or you can sink it up to its rim in a shaded outdoor location. When well rooted and obviously growing at the tip, shake out of the pot and plant in well-manured ground.

Orchid Cactus (F. L. Nansimo) — It is not unusual for an Epiphyllum cactus to have pink flowers one year and scarlet the next. In fact, certain hybrids, particularly the kinds that bloom often more than once a year, are noted for their ability to produce different colored flowers at different seasons of the year.

For instance, the variety London Beauty has red blossoms in summer and pink in autumn, while London Delight is pink in summer and quite a deep red in autumn. The reason why the blooms change color is not known, but the first flowers on newly rooted cuttings will nearly always be one of the pale shades.

Sawdust Mulch (V. A. O'S., Victoria) — Most certainly you can put a sawdust mulch on your asparagus bed; just make sure the soil has plenty of moisture first, and put down a generous sprinkle of ammonium sulphate fertilizer before spreading the mulch. I would say one cupful of the fertilizer per square yard would be enough for a sawdust mulch six inches thick.

Filbert Catkins (A. Y., Deep Cove) — Those little "tails" you picked from your filbert bushes last spring are not seeds and cannot be planted. They are the male flowers of the hazel, called catkins, and they supply the male pollen for fertilizing the female blossoms on the same bush so nuts can form.

Some Men Unique

SYDNEY HARRIS

How much has any individual personally affected history, either for good or bad? In his fascinating new book, The Step to Man, Dr. John R. Platt mentions what he calls the "streetcar test" for making such a measurement.

His test consists of asking this: Would world history have been appreciably different if such-and-such a man had been run over by a streetcar at, say, age 10? For most kings and presidents — and most scientists, too, Dr. Platt suggests — the answer is no.

"If they had not lived," he writes, "their places would have been taken by others with substantially similar opinions and policies and discoveries. But for some men — in our time, Lenin, Gandhi, Hitler, Churchill — the answer is obviously yes."

In considering American presidents since the turn of the century, only Franklin D. Roosevelt surely passes the test. The others — even Wilson and the first Roosevelt — could have been replaced by different men without substantially altering the course of American history.

But without Lenin there would most likely have been no Russian revolution; without Gandhi no independent India and the subsequent dissolution of the British Empire in our time; without Hitler no personality with enough pathological power to mobilize the German people into mass irrationality; without Churchill nobody to symbolize and concretize British resistance to the Nazi invasion.

And this, of course, is where Marx's whole theory of "economic determinism" breaks down. The forces of history are not as implacable or as inevitable as he thought; one strong personality, for good or for evil, can deflect the whole apparent course of events.

Who could have predicted in 1922 that the conservative and patrician governor of New York State, Franklin Roosevelt, would have set the U.S. on an entirely new course — a course it is still pursuing 30 years later, and which was not reversed even an inch during two Republican administrations?

Whether one agrees or disagrees with the general drift of these policies, they demonstrate the strength of one personality to alter dramatically the social landscape of his time.

Indeed, the whole Russian revolution itself is an ironic refutation of Marx's theory that men are largely motivated by their economic status and possessions — for Marx himself is a looming exception to that rule, the son of middle-class parents, who repudiated the bourgeois society of his age and almost single-handedly changed the face of the earth.

Such men are exceedingly rare, but when they arrive on the scene, the script is thrown away, and historical predictability goes by the boards.

Today, caught up by vast impersonal forces that seem too complex and overwhelming for the average man to cope with, it is heartening to remember that, somewhere in our land, a 10-year-old who is not being run over by a streetcar may shape the future in some utterly unimaginable — and perhaps quite wonderful — way.

LBJ-Bobby Thing, by ART BUCHWALD

The Panic-Spreaders

WASHINGTON — One of the problems of this election year is the emphasis placed on who is Bobby Kennedy's man and who is President Johnson's man in a local contest. When a Bobby Kennedy man is defeated in a primary, it is considered a blow to the Kennedy machine. When a Johnson man loses, it is a defeat for the president's policies in Viet Nam.

Even a coroner's election has national implications for the politically starved press and we can expect to see more read into the results of the 1966 elections than the forefathers of the Democratic party ever dreamed of.

If the truth be known, many of the local candidates are trying to disassociate themselves from both Kennedy and Johnson, and they live in fear that either of these national figures will show up and campaign for them.

But what do you do when you get a telephone call from Washington late at night at your local campaign headquarters?

"It's the President," the campaign manager whispers holding his hand over the phone.

"Tell him I'm out making a speech," the candidate says.

"Congressman Klinker is out campaigning, sir. He should be back in a couple of hours. Oh, you'd like to come out and make a few speeches for him?"

"Tell him with the airline strike he can't get here," the candidate says.

"You forgot he has his own airplane," the campaign manager says.

"Tell him it's impossible to get a hotel room. There's a Shriner's convention in town."

"Sir, this is the Congressman's campaign manager and I know he'll be thrilled with your decision. But our last poll shows the Congressman will be a shoo-in and we feel it might be better if you campaigned for somebody who really needed it."

The campaign manager turns

Fonda, Liz To Co-Star?

By SHEILAH GRAHAM

NEW YORK (NANA) — Henry Fonda is reading the script of Reflections In A Golden Eye. The bait — co-starring with Elizabeth Taylor. I don't remember them working together before. . . . Charlie Chaplin, a strict disciplinarian, told Marlon Brando on the first day of shooting A Countess From Hong Kong — "I'm an old man, and if I can get here on time, you can." Marlon was never late after that. . . . Alfred Hitchcock promises that his next movie will be a crime story in depth.

The reviews for Torn Curtain were not terribly good but business is, I am told. . . . Vanessa Dedgrave and Tony Richardson continue to live apart but they continue to be good friends. . . . Reminds me of the Julie Andrews-Tony Walton situation. Rarely together but always glowing in praise of each other.

In the Joe Hyams biography, Bogey, Humphrey Bogart, the late rough guy of the screen, emerges as a Grade A prankster who was sometimes cruel — to his wife, to his friends, and especially to his enemies. It's Bogie (I usually spell it Bogey) to life.

They have to give Sean Connery a special 24-hour-a-day guard in Japan. "They're coming through the bloody walls," says Sean, who is in Tokyo filming You Only Live Twice. "They" are the photographers, press, and the public.

Michael Caine booked solid until 1968, he tells me. He was pleased that the censors did not delete the abortion scene from Alfie. "It was because of the abortion that I made the picture." When Tippi Hedren saw it at the London premiere, she fainted.

The reason Beatle George Harrison invested in Sibylla's in London was because he wanted a discotheque where he could go without being stared at or jostled. . . . Talking of exclusivity, when Alvaro's proprietor in the very "in" place in Chelsea was asked "How many people can you accommodate?" he replied, "Fifty-six." "That's not many," he was told. "That is all I want," he replied.

to the candidate. "He says he has nothing to do next weekend and he thought he'd like to visit our part of the state just to keep his hand in."

"Tell him next weekend is very bad. They're expecting tornadoes out here."

The campaign manager speaks into the phone again. "Yes, sir, I am still here. You'd be willing to appear at a fund-raising dinner? Well, I know this is hard to believe, but we have too much money now. We're going to have to give some back. Oh, you would be? Just a minute." He turns to the Congressman.

"He said he'd like to give a major policy speech on Viet Nam in your district."

"Oh, no." The candidate holds his head. "Tell him he'll be picketed."

The campaign manager turns to the phone. "Yes, sir." He whispers, "He says if you don't want a speech on Viet Nam, how about a humdrum on civil rights?"

"Tell him we've got the civil rights vote."

"Yes, sir. Well, I'll have the Congressman call you as soon as he comes back. We're most grateful, sir." The campaign manager hangs up.

The campaign manager says, "What are we going to do now?"

"Let's not panic," the candidate says.

The phone rings again and the campaign manager picks it up. "Who?" He turns to the candidate. "It's Bobby Kennedy. He says he has nothing to do next weekend and would like to visit our part of the state."

"Okay," the Congressman says, "let's panic."

HAL BOYLE

In 1921 Mary Pickford, starred in a film version of Little Lord Fauntleroy.

In the era of silent movies a juvenile delinquent was a kid who had to be thrown out of the theatre for pitching spitballs at the lady up front who played the piano.

The corner grocery store sold more lard than it did butter.

When you couldn't even afford to spread on your breakfast toast, brother, you came from a poor family.

A feather bed was a sign of prosperity.

Most horses wore blinders. Just like people today wear sunglasses. The horse that drew the vegetable and fruit pedlar's wagon through the neighborhood usually had on a straw hat.

Only the educated suffered from arthritis. Everybody else over 40 suffered from "the rheumatiz."

Young ladies never carried umbrellas. They carried "parasols."

Half the girls graduating from high school sewed their own clothes — or their mothers did it for them.

If a boy didn't have a cent to buy gum, he could always make do by chewing soft tar, gouged from the street in summer.

People seemed to talk more about how to get rid of warts than how to avoid having coronary attacks.

Killer Car Found

LONDON (UPI) — Scotland Yard officials this morning announced the car believed to have been used by the killers of three unarmed plainclothes detectives Friday has been found in London.

They said the car — described as a blue green Standard sedan converted into a van — was being examined by detectives.

No other information was immediately available.

Earlier, Scotland Yard issued an unprecedented appeal for London citizens to take to the streets and search for the 10-year-old station wagon in which the killers of the detectives escaped.

CROOKS HELP

Even London's tightly organized underworld, shocked by the violation of the traditional gangster code against use of firearms, pledged assistance in the massive search which stretched throughout the British Isles.

Shocked Britons responded to the tragedy with a massive outpouring of sympathy and assistance for the families of the slain police. A trust fund started with an anonymous donation of £100,000 ($280,000) grew rapidly. Other contributions were coming in swiftly.

At Liverpool, a schoolboy handed over his ten shillings ($1.40) pocket money for the fund and left without giving his name.

SPECIAL PLEA

Detective superintendent Robert Chitty of The Yard's murder squad gave a despairing broadcast a special plea to citizens living in a 12-square-mile area of London around the murder scene.

He asked them to check the streets, garages and other likely hiding places for a "washed, washy blue" vehicle converted from a panel truck to a station wagon.

Parade Marks Anniversary

Wall Prevented War East German Claim

BERLIN (Reuters) — Thousands of armed troops marched through the streets of East Berlin Saturday, marking the fifth anniversary of the building of the Berlin Wall, which Communist chief Walter Ulbricht declared had prevented war.

Berlin's most famous boulevard, Unter den Linden, where the Kaiser and Hitler paraded their armies, echoed with the tramp of marching militia, soldiers, and people's police.

The two-hour celebration was the first of its kind by East Germany since it surprised the world by starting to build the wall in the early hours of Aug. 13, 1961.

LIFE-SAVER

Speaking from a stand near the state opera house, he said it had been necessary to build the wall in conjunction with the Soviet Union and other peoples democracies because West German imperialists had planned to destroy East Germany's political, economic and military achievements.

It had prevented "countless West Germans and West Berliners losing their lives . . . in a war," he said.

The Warsaw Pact countries agreed that a guard should be placed on the border and "the planned aggression could not take place — peace was secured."

Ulbricht made no mention of the 3,000,000 East Germans who fled to the West before the wall was built or the 58 killed by border guards while trying to cross it.

SHOW DENOUNCED

The western allied commandants in West Berlin Saturday denounced the military demonstration as a flagrant violation of four-power agreements.

West German officials in Bonn condemned Ulbricht's statement that the wall had been built to prevent war as "unjustified cynicism." They said his speech was a miserably unsuccessful attempt to justify the wall.

Air Losses

Worst Week Of War

By JOHN CANTWELL

SAIGON, South Viet Nam (AP) — U.S. air squadrons Saturday rounded out a week of widespread raids on North Viet Nam which had cost a record high of 13 planes. Two fell Friday, victims of enemy flak that experienced pilots now believe is the heaviest thrown up in any war.

"There seems to be a machine gun behind every tree," an air force spokesman remarked in reporting on plus and minus phases of 121 missions flown by air force and navy pilots over the north Friday.

TWO MORE

In a broadcast unconfirmed here, Hanoi's Viet Nam news agency declared two more planes — a jet fighter and a reconnaissance craft — were shot down Saturday. A separate dispatch charged that U.S. planes bombed a Catholic hamlet and a dike section on the outskirts of Hanoi, "causing many losses in lives and property."

In Saigon, a mine exploded within the home of a South Vietnamese navy officer a block from Premier Nguyen Cao Ky's office. Police informants said they believed the officer was a Viet Cong agent and had touched off the blast accidentally.

The Jerk, Mini-Skirts Blasted in Tunisia

TUNIS (UPI) — Tunisian President Habib Bourguiba has ordered a crack-down on the Jerk and the mini-skirts because he says they "offend the dignity of Tunisian women."

A presidential order has closed the capital's most swinging nightclub, Bey's Palladium. Among those who patronized the club were several of Bourguiba's ministers.

At the same time Bourguiba attacked bachelorhood, calling on all Tunisians of both sexes "to do their duty to their country, which consists of getting married by the age of 25."

Bennett Hint

Cabinet Post All Settled?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Sun says Premier Bennett has "hinted strongly" that Dr. Lawrence E. Ranta, medical director of the Vancouver General Hospital, will succeed Health Minister Eric Martin, who is retiring due to poor health.

Dr. Ranta, in a dispatch from Cranbrook where the premier officiated at sod-turning ceremonies for a new $4,500,000 hospital, said that when the premier was asked about rumors that Dr. Ranta would seek the Social Credit nomination in one of the six Vancouver ridings, he replied: "I think he will run, perhaps in Point Grey."

EXPERIENCED MAN

The premier was quoted as saying: "He (Ranta) is not only a very experienced medical man but is also experienced in administration of perhaps the biggest hospital in Canada."

Longshoremen Win Raise

Dockyard Peace Seems Assured

VANCOUVER (CP) — Threat of a longshore strike which could have tied up shipping at all of British Columbia's seven major ports appeared to have vanished Saturday.

The International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union (ILWU) and the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association announced a new agreement, subject to approval of their respective memberships — giving the province's 2,400 longshoremen substantially what they asked for.

BRIDGES HELPS

The new three-year contract, effective from Aug. 1, 1966 and jointly announced by union and employer representatives, gives the men a 50-cent-an-hour increase on a base rate of $13.38 an hour plus a number of fringe benefits, including increased pensions. Association spokesmen estimated the fringe benefits were worth about another 16 cents an hour.

The union, aided in its negotiations by Harry Bridges, international president who came up from his San Francisco headquarters a week ago, had asked for 50 cents an hour plus a number of fringe benefits.

Talks End, Machinists Blamed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — U.S. labor secretary W. Willard Wirtz bluntly blamed striking machinists Saturday night for failure to settle the 37-day-old airline strike.

Mr. Wirtz issued a strong statement after P. L. Siemiller, president of the striking International Association of Machinists, stormed out of a joint meeting with airline negotiators, which had been called by Mr. Wirtz.

The secretary said a tentative agreement had been reached earlier Saturday by the negotiators but "when we brought two representatives of each party together to complete the details of the agreement the union rejected the terms."

Tough Policies Of Mao Backed

TOKYO (AP) — Chinese Communist Chairman Mao Tse-tung has won complete vindication for his tough policies at home and abroad in a 10-day appearance before a full-session of the ruling Communist party Central Committee.

Assailed by domestic enemies, denounced by the Soviet Union and criticized by Asian Communists for refusing to forge a united front with the Russians to fight against the United States in Viet Nam, Mao, 72, got a warm welcome from the first plenary committee session held in four years.

Watts Finds Peace

They're Dancing in Charcoal Alley

By RAY ROGERS
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Instead of gunfire there was music, instead of swearing there was laughter, and instead of terror there was gaiety Saturday at the first annual Watts Summer Festival.

A six-block stretch which was, a year ago, at the vortex of the bloodiest race riot in United States history became a scene of children on carnival rides and adults examining paintings.

The strip is along 103rd Street from Compton to Wilmington Street, known last summer as Charcoal Alley. There, on lots cleared of the rubble resulting from the arson of last August, tents have been erected.

Thousands of persons, both Negro and white, were roaming the area in balmy weather. Much of their attention was directed toward the Afro-American, West Indian and modern paintings, sculpture and handicrafts.

Among the early arrivals on opening night was Mayor Samuel Yorty. "Isn't this beautiful?" he commented while strolling along. "Everybody loves everybody else."

He paused to shake hands with a Negro man. "I was wondering when you were coming down here," said the man.

"I come down here all the time," the mayor replied. "You just don't know about it."

Another visitor to the festival is James Meredith, the first Negro ever to graduate from the University of Mississippi. Meredith is in town to raise money at a rally Sunday for the impoverished in Mississippi. All six blocks have been sealed off to traffic. On one of the blocks there was dancing in the street, to the music of a jukebox.

The kids, of course, gravitated to a lot where six

Separatist Rebuked

DISTMASTER-GENERAL Jean-Pierre Cote makes sense when he says it would be to everyone's advantage to discard parochial, regional and even provincial concepts in Canada in order to achieve what is considered to be the first aim of all Canadians — national unity.

But it is questionable that national unity is indeed, the first aim of all.

Mr. Daniel Johnson, the Quebec premier, has made it very clear that his Union Nationale Party is more concerned with the preservation of what he terms the French "nation"; and that if it comes to a matter of choice he would sacrifice the confederation to the French Canadian ambition.

A protest from such a man as Mr. Cote carries far more weight than an outburst from someone of another background. He is one of an old family of Quebec, with a long political Liberal tradition, a Roman Catholic, a youthful 40 years of age, and a father of eight children. His words would have a very much greater impact than those of a Maritimer, for example, even one with a United Empire Loyalist heritage; and certainly far more than of a leader in the West.

The member from Longueuil, perhaps, is setting a pattern of resistance to the separatists long lacking in Ottawa.

It was politically inexpedient for the Liberal government — particularly while in minority — to stand against the impatient demands of Mr. Jean Lesage, himself a Liberal and former federal colleague of the prime minister.

But Mr. Johnson is of a different political color. And although his party is not called separatist, his policies are of a nature to lead, if pursued with any consistency, to the same end.

A critic of another background than Mr. Cote would have hesitated to compare, as he does, the Quebec separatist with the United States Negro. But it is perfectly valid, in the sense that the new cry of Dr. Martin Luther King's more radical supporters is for domination rather than equality with another racial group.

"We too in Canada have extremists who, in order to obtain their goal wish to dominate others in building their own little kingdom," the minister maintained.

Mr. Cote's angry denunciation of separatism and all that it implies may be no more than a warning to Premier Johnson that if he expects co-operation from Ottawa he should revise his "nationalist" attitude; or it may have been a manoeuvre designed to strengthen Mr. Lesage in the Quebec political field. But it is the first voice in a long time to ring out with courage from the ranks of government against the arrogant demands of Quebec.

Even if he stands alone among his colleagues, Mr. Cote will have wide support from the other defenders of Confederation.

Parliamentary TV

THERE HAVE BEEN suggestions at Ottawa that Parliament should open its chambers to television cameras and let parliamentary debate be followed by the public at large on the small household screen. Nothing concrete has been advanced in this direction but no doubt the present approach in Britain to such proposals will be watched with interest.

At Westminster the House of Lords has already gone on record as agreeable in principle to televising its proceedings, and a Commons committee has now reported on the same subject. The latter takes a cautious view on the matter, which will come up later for general debate.

There is admission that the TV cameras might "bring out the ham" in some legislators, which wouldn't be at all surprising. This is a temptation which all television personalities find hard to resist. And politicians seeking to create an image for themselves — especially backbenchers given a chance to steal a limelight normally denied them — might easily fall victim to exhibitionism.

Principally, however, the committee did not rule out broadcasts entirely, but only after a short closed-circuit trial period to let the MPs themselves see how they looked before making a final decision.

Continuous live television did not find favor because this was considered "impracticable and undesirable." The cost alone for continuous broadcasting was too great, and live TV without cuts would increase the chances of "playing to the cameras." The committee preferred edited versions if parliamentary television was to be introduced.

This would seem to be a proviso sure to arouse as much conflict within parties as between them. Who got the screen coverage and who didn't would be a difficult problem to solve without a lot of hard feelings.

One other aspect of continuous TV transmission, although understandably not mentioned by the committee, is that this could be no boring to viewers they would turn to other channels. A diet of the long-winded speeches inseparable from parliamentary discussion would soon pall, as any reader of Hansard has ample opportunity to judge.

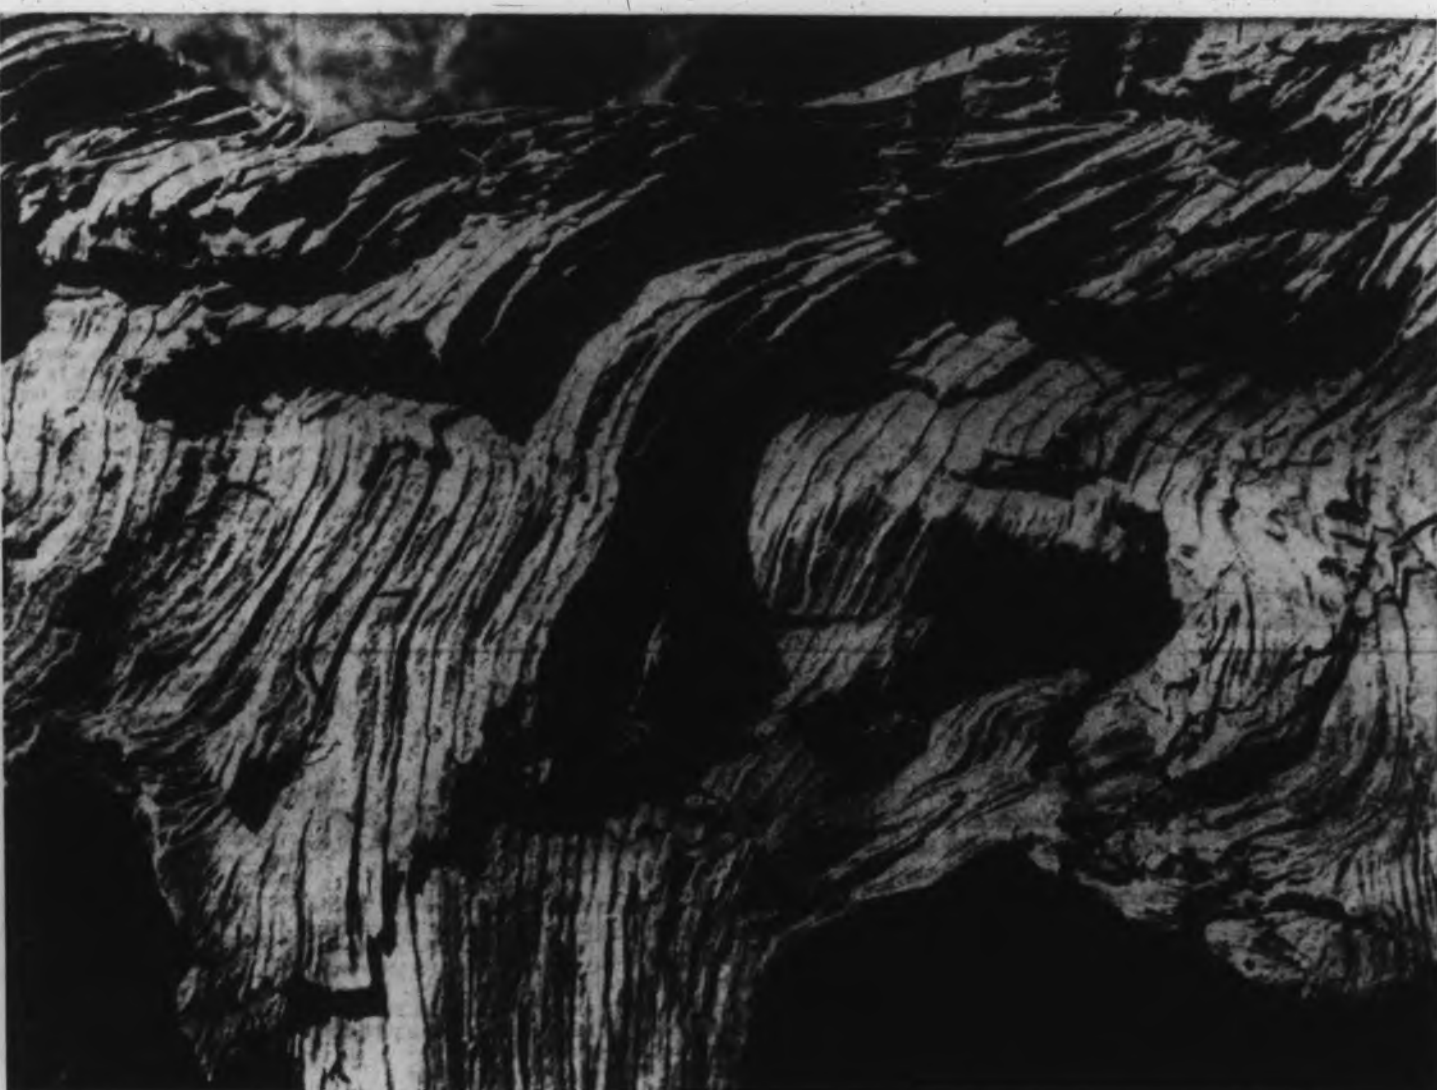

Yet probably to some degree or another television will get a foot in the parliamentary door, and so the British moves in this direction may be expected to invite similar action in this country.

For Adults Only

FEW WILL FIND FAULT with Secretary of State Judy LaMarsh's decision to go along with the Centennial Commission's advice not to stage a youth parliament as part of the celebrations of Canada's 100th birthday next year.

In turning down the proposed project Miss LaMarsh concurred with the recommendation of the commission which reported "on its continuing deep concern over the numerous problems inherent in both the organization and content of such a youth parliament which it felt could prove a disruptive rather than positive contribution to our centennial celebrations."

It is not difficult to guess that the commission was more than somewhat influenced in reaching this conclusion by the ill-starred antics of our already established national Parliament in Ottawa which over the past two years has proved itself to be "a disruptive rather than positive" force in Canada.

Thinking Aloud

"... of shoes, and ships, and scaling wax..."

By TOM TAYLOR

If you peruse the Colonist with an avid eye, as I am sure you do, you will have read of the two British bridge champions who were accused of cheating in an international tournament.

They have been cleared of any such charge, so that ends that as far as this column is concerned. But cheating per se has awakened its curiosity.

There is cheating and cheating, you know. And the cheater is not always a person. Fate gets into the act. Had a spinner at the Empire Games last week stumbled and fallen as he was winning a race, he would have felt badly cheated. But with no aspersions to cast at anybody.

Mind you, I have had it whispered to me that the old card player, in a friendly game where nothing really matters, has been known to depart slightly from the strict path of rectitude, but he, or she, is mostly indulging in personal delusion.

Or, giving either just due merely having a mental lapse. This is what happens to some golfers. I have also been told, merely for the sport of trotting the fairways with no trophy at stake and no one checking their score. Imagination can play havoc with arithmetic.

These, though, are akin to the little white lies that are an acceptable part of our social code. If there were none of these, by the way, society would be chaos.

So, would Parliament, I imagine, where this sort of thing is nothing short of an art. Those evasive answers, for example, of the kind which one noted statesman cited as "terminological investigations." He didn't dare call them cheating, you see, this being extremely bad form.

Perhaps more "cheating" goes on when it comes to fishing. If I may presume to remark, then in any other sphere. At least the tall fish tales are legendary, so there must be substance to such notion. As a matter of fact I felt cheated myself some years ago at an office fishing derby.

I caught what I thought was a real big one but they told me it didn't count since it was a dogfish. This muffed me. I can assure you. They hadn't said beforehand the catch must be salmon, and in my ignorance I thought a fish was — well, a fish.

Incidentally, or perhaps not so incidentally, I have been intrigued to find that the original cheater, so-called, was an official of ancient days titled Escheator, who was appointed to collect dues and taxes. The use of the abbreviation shows how these officers were wont to fleece the people.

When we fill out our income tax forms each year I rather fancy we think we are still being fleeced.

Toussing on political matters it is a certainty that after the polls close next month in the provincial election some candidates are going to feel they've been cheated by the voters. Unwillingly perhaps on the latter's part but with dire effect nevertheless.

And of course when some of those grandiose campaign promises end with the ballot count the voters themselves are going to feel cheated.

You don't have to play bridge to be involved in this derogatory term, you see; innocently or otherwise.

Best of all, if you miss out on one, you usually have a choice, so can latch on to another.

Like Liberal MP Auguste Choquette did.

Initially he was booked to go on the veterans' committee's European tour, but the maverick Quebec MP was not exactly made to feel welcome aboard because, among other things, he had been advocating the "firing" of Queen Elizabeth, the severance of Canada from the Commonwealth, Canadian disassociation from all things British, and the establishing of a republic.

Anyway, Auguste Choquette was only eight when the Second World War broke out, so really had no personal interest, much less any kind of a stake in the life and times of veterans, dead or alive.

But as a consolation prize he got to go on the 10-day all-expense trip to Britain of all places, for Auguste Choquette's with the Canadian delegation to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association.

Softball Jolly Fine

From Colonist Files

AN advance party of Royal Air Force personnel had arrived at "a Lower Vancouver Island Airport," 25 years ago, to make preparations for its use as one of the largest R.A.F. training stations in Canada.

Members of the party were interested in making the station as homelike as possible: furniture, radios and gramophones, books and magazines would be appreciated, a spokesman said. And sports equipment, too — some fine soccer and rugby players would soon be arriving, and, said the airman, "I think this game of softball is jolly fine. I saw some girls playing it at Sidney and the boys are anxious to master its details."

Victoria city council thought of selling most of the screeching and walling peacocks and cranes at Beacon Hill Park — but there was doubt that anyone would take them. Parks Administrator W. H. Warren said he had enquired in Vancouver, and they were not wanted there.

Victoria's Saanich annually had broken out, 50 years ago, and the mayor warned that the municipal council must at once stop saying nasty things about the city, himself and the aldermen.

Cause of discord was that Victoria had refused to pay any part of damages awarded a farmer against the Saanich police chief and the Victoria dairy inspector for demolition of some barns without proper authorization.

Victoria said Saanich had made a blunder. Search said Victoria was trying to put one over on it.

"... If Saanich doesn't know the law," said Mayor Stewart, "I refuse to sit here and let them say what they are saying now."

"I did think that in the last two years we were getting along amicably with Saanich. But if they continue this sort of thing, I for one will not have anything more to do with them."

All the aldermen were greatly delighted with this declaration of independence, and cried "hear, hear."

The 55-ton telescope for Little Saanich Mountain had just arrived in Victoria, destined to be at that time the largest in operation in the British Empire and the second largest in the world. Mimus the lens, which was to come two weeks late, the telescope was conveyed in three cars from Cleveland.

Among the Little Locals, 75 years ago:

"Only a portion of the Wasp's band will play at the Hill on Sunday."

"Ten dollars a piece was what the privilege of fighting on the street cost two hoodlums, yesterday."

"His Lordship, the Bishop of Columbia, will give another of his enjoyable garden parties on the 26th inst."

"The obtrusive nails on the sidewalks are being made war upon by a small army of corporation workmen."

"Officer Carter is making the firing of guns in the park very expensive. A Chinaman was fined $12.50 for the offence, yesterday, and a white boy $2.50."

"A number of Indians from Barclay Sound are eating salmon near Beechy Bay. They are selling them on the Victoria market. They have put up their tents along the shore."

The news by "electric telegraph" normally was placed in the columns of the Colonist in the order of its arrival, 100 years ago, although some of the most important items were given mention in small headlines at the top.

Thus, "Last Night's Despatches" started off a century ago today with the information that "the latest telegrams from the Continent state that affairs are unchanged," and then the reader learned — in this order — that cotton was dull in London; the truce between Italy and Austria had been extended 10 days; customs officers at Liverpool had seized six blockade runners for the U.S. government; Parliament had been "adjourned (prolonged)"; Canada in London on Aug. 11 were 87 1/2, 5 5/8, 6 1/2; there was great excitement in London at the discovery of an attempt to blow up the Houses of Parliament with packages of gunpowder; the members of Parliament had fears of another Guy Fawkes plot; and finally, that "Deaths from cholera in London during the last week were 1,033, and from diarrhoea, 354."

Chant Tells Local 8:

'You Will Carry Through!'

Marchers enter Victoria, stride down Douglas toward Legislature

By BRIAN DOHERTY

It was like a picnic with placards. Everyone was smiling — with two exceptions — but the message was hard and clear.

The 1,000-plus pulp and paper workers at Harmac want nothing more to do with Local 695 of the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers.

They want Local 8 of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Workers to be their bargaining agent.

CROWD POLITE

To press their point, 800 workers brought their wives and children in a massive cavalcade Saturday from Nanaimo to the steps of Parliament Buildings.

They were an orderly, polite, happy crowd. They let their placards do their talking.

FIGHT URGED

"Puppets or Canadians?" "Fight for the Right to be Free Canadians." "Do American Unions Control Our Labor Boards?" the placards asked.

The whole thing started last week when the Labor Relations Board rejected an application that Local 8 be the bargaining agent for the Harmac mill workers.

PETITION SHOWN

The Harmac people want the International decertified. They showed this in a petition signed by more than 1,000 of the Harmac workers.

The petition was presented on the building steps to Public Works Minister Chant who accepted it on behalf of Labor Minister Peterson.

POLICE ESCORT

The workers arrived in Victoria at about 1 p.m. and assembled at Centennial Square before marching down Douglas Street to the buildings with a police escort.

Angus McPhee, a vice-president of the Pulp and Paper Workers of Canada, described the parade as a "fine expression of solidarity."

NUMBERS INCREASED

Their numbers were boosted by men from Prince Rupert, Elk Falls, Crofton and Vancouver.

One of the speakers explained the crowd's feelings in one sentence: "We are not going to be forced into a union we have decided emphatically does not serve our needs."

TWO LOOKED

The non-smiling faces belonged to two members of the International.

Good-natured jests were aimed at the representatives who refused to identify themselves. They also refused to make any comment on the show of strength.

SPEECHES MADE

Naturally, speeches were made. They were all aimed at the same point — a Canadian union.

Spokesman Gordon Wickham said the workers were dissatisfied with the union because of the way it operated.

"We have been trying to get Canadian autonomy unsuccessfully for three or four years," he said.

CHANT COMMENT

Mr. Chant said he was unable to make comment on the controversy.

"I am here to accept the petition on behalf of Mr. Peterson and the provincial government," he said. "But, no doubt, with perseverance you folk will carry through."

A delegation from the local is to meet with Mr. Peterson tonight.

New Democrat Blasts O'Neal

A New Democrat who helped organize the campaign for government car insurance has given strong support to the Canadian Pulp and Paper Workers.

Thomas Moran, 4155 Barber, said "I think it is the duty of every Canadian to stand up and be counted and fight for an all-Canadian union."

"It would be a step toward becoming a truly independent nation."

He had harsh words for International organizer E. P. O'Neal, former secretary of the B.C. Federation of Labor. "When we were working on the car insurance brief, he would not give us any help. But he did go ahead on his own, and presented a brief the same time we did. He didn't want anyone taking prestige from him."

Courtenay's Park Opened In Centennial Ceremony

COURTENAY — Courtenay's centennial project was officially opened Saturday by Lieutenant-Governor Pearkes.

Centennial chairman Myrtle Vickberg presided over ceremonies at Centennial Puntledge Park.

The lovely park on the river bank was the scene of speech-making and applause.

The public was addressed by Chief Andy Frank and Mayor George Hobson.

At night there was a ball in the Native Sons Hall. The hall was decorated in the style of the early 1800s.

Strachan Backs Canadian Pulp Union

NANAIMO — Opposition leader Robert Strachan broke with the policy of the B.C. Federation of Labor Saturday.

At a rally of members of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Workers Mr. Strachan stated that he was "100 per cent behind them."

UNION OF CHOICE

He did point out that it was not the policy of the NDP to interfere in internal union troubles.

"This is not our right," said Mr. Strachan. "However, you do have the right to choose for yourself the union you wish to represent you."

The opposition leader blamed the current union strife at Harmac on labor policies of the present government.

PARTY FIGHT

"The NDP has been fighting all along for this very thing," he said.

The rally was held Saturday morning in the Nanaimo civic parking lot just prior to a car cavalcade of about 400 cars leaving for Victoria.

NEY SUPPORT

Following Mr. Strachan's address, Frank Ney, prominent Nanaimo businessman and probable candidate for the Soared nomination in this riding, spoke briefly.

He wished the demonstrators good luck, and said he was sure they would find the government willing to listen to their complaints.

Strachan speaks before march.

Un-Pacific Ocean Dunks Paddlers

By WILLIAM THOMAS

MONTAGUE HARBOR — Members of the Quebec canoe team who were dumped into the icy waters off Point Grey had hardly a chance left in their teeth when they made camp here Saturday night.

Captain of the team, Gill Tinkler who is from Mont-Laurie north of Montreal, was so enthusiastic about his welcome by over 200 island residents it was hard to keep up with his flow of French.

He explained how his six-man team was swamped as their canoe ran into heavy swells off Point Grey.

Strong westerly winds and an incoming tide combined to dunk the Quebecers with the loss of their water bottles and a few paddles.

Mr. Tinkler said "it seemed like an hour before our crew was picked up from that chilly water."

Asked to comment on his reception to the Pacific Ocean Mr. Tinkler just laughed.

Phil Barter who was aboard an RNC harbor patrol vessel commented "it may have seemed like an hour but actual time in the water was more like 15 minutes."

A Vancouver City Police boat moved in fast and took the soaked paddlers aboard.

The navy's auxiliary vessel

Clifton took the canoe from the water and then picked up the crew for the trip to Galiano Island.

The near disaster forced officials of the Canadian Centennial Canoe Pageant to suspend the crossing of the Georgia Strait less than an hour after it had started in Vancouver.

This was the first serious accident in the eight days of racing. Luckily none of the Quebec crew was injured.

With the first salt water lap cancelled other escort vessels, the Coast Guard cutter Ready, and an RCMP boat moved in and picked up the other crews and their canoes.

"We were very disappointed at missing the salt water lap," said Gill Tinkler. The other crews were also unhappy about being ordered out of the water.

A race official explained "all 10 crews were exhausted by their first taste of the wave-tossed salt water. It was the first in the 650-mile race."

The crews wanted to continue but Mr. Barter said "the frail craft could not cope with the short choppy swells which quickly had them taking on water."

Quebec's crew were not the only casualties, the choppy sea and heavy swell had some officials turning a bilious green and a few heading for the side.

At the time of the swamping the Manitoba crew was in the lead with British Columbia second, Alberta in third spot and then the luckless French-Canadians.

Saturday night Galiano residents did their best to make it up to the visitors.

Mary Backlund and Gordon Angus McDonald were chosen to offer the official greetings on behalf of the islanders.

Mrs. Backlund was chosen because her ancestors have lived in the area for five generations.

Mr. McDonald's forefathers came to Canada in 1749 from Scotland to join the Hudson's Bay Company.

After the formal welcoming speeches the islanders got down to the serious business of showing the canoeists a good time.

A giant bonfire was built in Montague Park and canoeists joined their hosts in a campfire sing-song.

Thousands Cheer Duncan's Big Carnival

Tourists Visit Bureau On Comox Valley Visits

COURTENAY — One thousand cars stopped for information at the Courtenay Tourist Bureau in the second half of July. The tourist staff has reported a total of almost 1,000 cars — an increase over the same period last year when 957 cars stopped. The busiest day was reported to be Saturday, July 23 with 87 cars calling in at the bureau.

People are also still apparently coming to the Courtenay area, and 201 of the cars bore American licence plates, six cars were occupied by people from England, three by Germans and one carload of people were from Ireland. Of the remaining cars, 148 were from Canadian provinces other than B.C.

McCormack Wins Tennis Tournament

COWICHAN BAY — Friday night the South Cowichan Lawn Tennis Club entertained visitors with a supper, fireside singing and dancing, before the big day of the tournament.

An upset of Saturday's matches occurred when Art Fish sprained his ankle and had to default to Don McCormick.

President of the club Jeff Hunter said "It was a most gratifying tournament from the point of view of the club, with old friends and players from all over."

The round-up for the tournament is: Hedi Jackson, Portland, received first prize in the ladies' singles, Pam Hunter, Vancouver, second.

In the ladies' doubles Pam Hunter and Natalie Rogers both of Vancouver got first prize and Ardice Salvendy, Vancouver and Laverne Voloch also of Vancouver placed second.

Don McCormick, Victoria, was first in the men's open singles and Art Fish, Portland and Art Jeffrey and Vic Rollins

Woman Fined

NANAIMO — A $250 fine and a six months' licence suspension were given Mrs. Rudy Cooper of Wellington in Nanaimo magistrate's court.

Mrs. Cooper was found guilty on a charge of driving without due care and attention. Her vehicle was involved in an accident Thursday on the Island Highway near Bowen Road.

There were no serious injuries received in the mishap.

DUNCAN — Kazimierz Hawrylecki, 16, was raised into adult court and pleaded guilty to a charge of theft of an automobile and 11 charges of breaking and entry.

Magistrate George Hallett sentenced him to nine months, definite and nine months indefinite.

Forest museum entry chugs through Duncan

DUNCAN — Thousands of people lined the streets to view the first Timber Carnival parade in 10 years.

Firemen clowned on the streets and threw candy suckers to the hundreds of kiddies along the way.

And the mayor and his guests received candy too.

Many colorful floats carrying beauty queens and just pretty girls paraded by to the music of the Powell River Pipe Band and Nanaimo Concert Band.

Horses and their riders pranced between the decorated motor vehicles.

An eye-catching first prize-winner was a miniature Batman car, all in black.

A 1918 vehicle entered by the B.C. Forest Museum caused much amusement.

The two hour parade ended at Pioneer Park where the logging activities, such as horizontal log chopping and speed climbing were taking place.

Dwight Carpenter, Castle Rook, Washington set a new world record in tree climbing with 34.3 seconds.

The previous world record was 35 seconds.

DUNCAN — Sea cadets from HMCS Quadra performed a spectacular Sunset Ceremony at the cenotaph here.

The contingent from the sea cadet summer training camp consisted of the guard of honor with 30 boys under the command of Lieut. Bernard Brown of West Vancouver, and a band with 30 boys.

Lieut. Brown is a former member of the Mainguy sea cadet corps.

Taking the salute was Duncan Mayor Jack Dobson.

Alan Mole, Commanding Officer of the Navy League Cadet Corps.

Mr. Brand said some of the boys performing the sunset ceremony come from as far east as Ontario.

They attend an eight-week special training course at HMCS Quadra.

He said other sea cadets attend Quadra for two-week periods and a total of 1,500 boys are trained every year at the centre on northern Vancouver Island.

Many of the spectators lined city streets when the sea cadets, dressed in white uniforms, marched to the cenotaph where a large crowd assembled.

Following the ceremony the boys were given refreshments by Navy League members at the Legion Hall.

PROGRAMMES

1. INTRODUCTORY

Adult students with elementary school education only will be encouraged and assisted in programmes of studies designed to suit their needs, allowing them to progress to the regular programmes listed below. Educational deficiency need not be a barrier to enrolment at the Institute.

Special classes in core subjects will be available. Adult students will not be required to take all courses in all grades associated with a regular school for youngsters. When a degree of proficiency has been reached in these "core subjects" (mainly English, Mathematics and Science) the adult student may move ahead into a programme in which secondary school completion is the goal.

2. SECONDARY SCHOOL COMPLETION

Adult students eighteen years of age or older may be given permission to complete Secondary School standing (Grade XII) on a special adult programme—The Adult Secondary Programme. Total requirements, compared to school age student programmes, have been eased.

Under new Department of Education regulations, secondary school completion may be achieved on one of several programmes.

1. Adult Academic Technical

This programme fulfills the requirements of university entrance and higher levels of technology.

2. Adult Commercial

A high degree of commercial specialization is possible by completing this programme.

3. Adult Industrial*

Secondary school completion may be achieved through this programme which emphasizes industrial training.

4. Adult Community Services*

Completion on this programme will permit a student to specialize in community services training.

*Under development. Not available this year.

Students who have completed Grade XI or have incomplete standing in Grade XII will normally be required to complete the requirements of their original programme.

3. SENIOR MATRICULATION

This is a Provincial Department of Education standard. However, the five subjects required may be chosen to satisfy first-year university requirements, making it possible for students to transfer into the second year of university work. A close liaison with the universities facilitates such transfer in accordance with their admission regulations.

Senior Matriculation requires completion of Grade 12 (Academic and Technical) plus:

(1) English 100-101 *

(2) Four subjects selected from:

- | | |
|---------------------------|--------------------------|
| (a) Biology 100 * | (k) History 102 * (Cdn.) |
| (b) Chemistry 101 * | (l) Latin 110 |
| (c) French 110 * | (m) Latin 120 |
| (d) French 120 * | (n) Mathematics 101 * |
| (e) German 90 * | (o) Mathematics 120 * |
| (f) German 110 | (p) Physics 101 * |
| (g) German 120 | (q) Spanish 110 |
| (h) Greek 90 | (r) Spanish 120 |
| (i) Greek 101 | (s) Zoology 105 |
| (j) History 101 * (World) | |

*—It is intended to schedule classes in these subjects.

Students with incomplete Grade 12 may enrol in a partial Grade 13 programme while making good their Grade 12 deficiencies.

4. POST SECONDARY

This is a new departure in education with challenging possibilities. The programme will depart from traditional courses and feature specialized training in how to get started on a career. Statistics are available to show the "dollars-and-cents worth" of a high school education in terms of life earnings. This new one-year POST SECONDARY PROGRAMME should increase these earnings considerably by placing one in a preferred position when job-seeking and earning promotions.

Using the liberal arts as a vehicle, the programme will feature such subjects as:

- | | |
|--|-------------------------|
| 1. Thinking and speaking on one's feet | 6. Practical Psychology |
| 2. Salesmanship | 7. Practical Economics |
| 3. Rapid Reading and Comprehension | 8. Practical Sociology |
| 4. Discussion and Debate | 9. Problem Solving |
| 5. Report Writing | |

A Diploma will be awarded on successful completion of the programme.

5. COMMERCIAL

The commercial department will offer job-oriented training in clerical, accountancy and secretarial areas. A flexible programme will be available by which several goals may be achieved.

DIPLOMA COURSE—Consists of a year studies resulting in a high degree of employable skills.

SECONDARY SCHOOL COMPLETION (Grade 12)—This can be achieved by completion of the DIPLOMA COURSE requirements plus English 12 and Social Studies 11. This may be accomplished in one school year.

BRUSH-UP COURSES—Students may purchase blocks of instructional time at the rate of 20 hours for $10 which may be applied to instruction and practice. This will be largely individual instruction.

6. VICTORIA SCHOOL OF ART

The new Victoria School of Art, a department of the Institute, is headed by D. J. L. Anderson, C.P.E., A.O.C.A. It will offer a high standard first-year foundation course in the fine and commercial arts, and will include

- Graphics
- Design (two and three dimensional)
- Color
- Lettering
- Still Life and Composition
- Research and Museum Lectures
- Life Drawing
- Drawing from Costumed Figures
- Space-Volume Analysis

Foundation Course students, on completion, may continue into specialized areas or transfer to other arts schools.

Secondary School completion (Grade XII) may be possible by fulfilling requirements of the Visual and Performing Arts Programme.

DIPLOMAS AND CERTIFICATES

The Institute of Adult Studies (Greater Victoria) offers short courses, workshops and seminars to meet requirements of special groups in the area. However, most programmes consist of three or more terms. Recognition of successful completion of study will be given in three ways:

1. Statement of Standing—awarded for each course completed.
2. Institute Certificate—awarded for completion of a programme which fulfills the requirements of university entrance.
3. Institute Diploma—awarded for completion of an acceptable programme which does not serve as a prerequisite for eligibility to enter a university.

COUNSELLING

A counselling service is available to all students in the Counselling Centre of the Institute. Full-time students are required to make use of this service when registering; however, the final responsibility regarding course selection rests with the student. Students are encouraged to take advantage of this service for assistance in academic, vocational and personal problems.

Counselling Centre will be open from 9:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, from August 1st. Evening counselling will be available after August 16th, from 6:30 p.m. - 8:30 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays, or by special appointment.

Testing is available as an integral part of the counselling services.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND BURSARIES

Students attending the Institute of Adult Studies will be eligible for scholarships awarded by the Government of British Columbia. As the number and type of scholarships, private bursaries, awards and loans vary from time to time, students should make their interest known to the Principal.

VICTORIA, B.C., SUNDAY, AUGUST 14, 1966

This tale has a moral. The story itself concerns a local historical occurrence of bygone times. The moral developed just the other day.

Originally, I wrote the story thus:

Long years ago, when Beach Drive was not, the Gonzales Hill rocks came right down to the little bay at its foot, and there was no road at all, only paths.

Little Camp in the Wilderness

By VIVIENNE CHADWICK

Driving that way recently, by all the charming homes with their gay summer gardens so carefully tended and manicured, I suddenly remembered something out of the past, in an era when it took half the morning to reach the spot where I now paused in my car.

Under the trees, on the rocks at the south end of the bay, there had once been, for a few short days during a forgotten summer, a quiet little camp.

It had been set up by two Fairfield district boys in their teens, Bobby, and one of his brothers. (I forget which one. He has several.) They invited their cousin Leila to stay for a time, too, because Leila was good at all boy-type things, with no nonsense about her. She was fun. Leila's mother didn't wholly approve, but said she might go for a couple of days if another girl went along, so, as I was her closest friend, I was included. The boys would give us their tent.

♦ I lived with grandparents. They were slightly stunned. To begin with, the place was at the end of nowhere. One had to take the streetcar, Foul Bay, I suppose, travel to the far distant end of the line, and then walk through fields and woods and over the rocks to the bay. Practically an outpost of empire. Besides — no chaperone? It wasn't respectable.

It was, though, and we must all of us have been considered reasonably trustworthy, because we were given, albeit reluctantly, the required permission. Leila and I, feeling awesomely adventurous, and staggering under loads of supplies and bedding made the great safari.

The boys greeted us blithely. They were efficient and most chivalrous. They had readied the camp as much as possible, and the tent was all ours. They had built a little fireplace in the rocks, and had caught fish for our supper. A rowboat sat on the beach nearby, though I don't remember where that came from.

I do recall that that very first night, however, I discovered a little known medical secret. I had cleverly stepped into the still hot embers of our supper-time fire with a bare foot, blistering a couple of toes. They hurt, and to ease them, as we were grouped about the fire until bedtime, I sat with the injury in a small pool of salt water in which the fish had been cleaned! To my surprise the burns were completely healed the next morning.

It was a charming camp. For two days we saw nobody but each other. We fished, beachcombed, paddled, explored the rocks, and might well have been at the ends of the earth, except for the ships passing out at sea. We got up one morning before the sun, in order to go floundering. This was a new activity for me, and I was fascinated. One eased the boat into the water very quietly, and drifted over the surface with the least possible disturbance, watching for the tell-tale half-outline that would indicate the flat fish smooching in the sand at the bottom of the clear shallows. The spearman stood poised in the bow, and the early rising was so that there would be no sun to cast a warning shadow.

The boys were expert, and landed us enough flounders for breakfast. I remember that I thought them a delicious meal.

Later that same day a typical Victoria wind came up abruptly, and we looked for something interesting to occupy us, since the good weather activities seemed to have come to an end.

It didn't take long to dream up a good game. I think it was Bobby's idea.

He said, thoughtfully: "If we used one of the blankets, and an oar, we could go for a sail!"

No sooner said than done. We fetched a blanket and piled into the rowboat, but we'd no more than got the sail half rigged when the wind caught it, swept us in a flash clear across the bay, and landed us with a jarring thud on the further shore. This was marvellous! We towed the boat around again to the starting point, and repeated the performance. It kept us happy for hours, until everyone was exhausted and soaking wet. Then we strung the blanket up somewhere to dry, and cooked a hearty meal.

Once we ran short of butter, and the reason for this was a rather curious one. I think it was the second morning, and sunny, and we went exploring up the hillside. Here we almost immediately encountered a situation which we could turn to our advantage.

There had apparently been a spot of rock-quarrying going on, and to our delight we discovered a length of narrow-gauge and rusty track, probably about a city block in length, which ran down a roughly prepared bed to the edge of a cliff. Not only that, but, wonder of wonders, there was a host of baby box-cars, which had obviously been used to transport the rock to the dump below, and which now sat there just waiting for us!

We made several runs with it, but because the slope was steep, we must jump off long before we got to the end of the track and hang on to the car to avoid its being carried over the cliff. However, we soon took care of that. We gathered the largest rocks we could carry, and blocked the ends of the track. Even then, however, we found we couldn't get the boxcar going fast enough to provide any real excitement, and we decided that this was because it was so rusty.

"It," said the boys, "we only had some grease, we could really travel!"

"Well," said Leila and I, the housewifely types, "we've got a whole pound of butter!"

So some of us went back down to the camp and got the butter. (Not, at that time, 88c a pound!) The boys applied it at strategic points, and the results were eminently successful. The little buggy, careening wildly, rocketed down the tracks at a deliciously frightening speed, and crashed into the end boulders with a jar that shook the teeth.

Somebody suggested races. One person stood guard over the now seriously threatened rock stops, one timed the run with a watch, one helped start with a good shove, and the fourth rode the boxcar. I don't know who won, in the end, and I certainly don't know why it was that none of us was flung into limbo, overturned and crushed, or wound up with smashed arms and legs. We survived quite happily, and had a splendidly exhilarating morning.

Well, the years march on, a city grows, rocky hill-sides are whittled away to build roads, and houses go up by the score where once rabbits romped on the edge of civilization. All is changed, and the only thing left is the memory.

Children grow up too, and scatter. Leila Wootton Paterson, my old school and camping friend, lives in North Vancouver, and like myself has grandchildren. Her mother, Mrs. Steve Wootton, aged 99 now, is still very much alive indeed.

But I believe, of the four who speared flounders in the bright shallows at dawn, sailed the choppy waters of the bay with a blanket, and rode an abandoned boxcar down the side of a young mountain, there are only two of us still living in Victoria... myself, and His Lordship Mr. Justice Robert Wootton.

I wonder if he remembers! And that was my story. But, having completed this vital segment of local history, I began to be assailed by doubts. After all, it was a half-century ago! I had better check. So, in the interests of both accuracy and courtesy, I wrote to my playmate of bygone years.

By return of post — which will surely reach those who may not always have encountered such satisfactory celerity in legal processes — I received an extremely pleasant reply. His Lordship had, apparently, no objection to my story at all, but there was one item he felt obliged to mention.

He hadn't been a member of that particular camp, had never even visited it, and had had nothing whatever to do with it at any time!

This shook me. Then the memories I have of him, in white shirt and short knickerbockers, on the beach, are of other occasions, picnics, perhaps? Anyway, my correspondent thought that the two boys actually involved might well have been his brother Gay, and Leila's brother Bowen. The blanket-sail episode, he thought, sounded like a "typical Gay manoeuvre." He suggested that I write both to Leila and to Gay, now a school-teacher in Edmonton, for further information. Bowen, young, good-looking, and a talented artist in his teens, was killed in the First World War.

I did this. Back from North Vancouver came a long letter from Leila. She remembered the camp

PYGMALION'S GREEN ROOM

The days of the dear old elocution teacher are over

By PATRICK O'NEIL

The windows threw sunlight around the yellow walls of the Green Room.

Students in shorts and slacks lay flat on the floor, apparently lifeless.

Others crouched over them, pushing their heads, their hands, their feet, looking for any sign of tension.

The lying figures were relaxed, their heads wobbled when touched, their arms lay limp, legs moved like rubber.

"Now turn them over," said Jane Cowell.

The kneeling students began to push over the dead weight of the lying partners.
Boys rolled limp girls over, girls pulled and heaved at the arms of heavy boys.

"Now roll them back," said the teacher, and it was done.

"All right, now we're ready," said Miss Cowell. The exercise was designed to induce and test relaxation.

It was a prelude to a lesson from the British speech teacher, who is in Victoria this summer to assist with the University of Victoria summer theatre program.

"The days of the dear old elocution teacher are over. Now, we don't try to alter the actual voice," Miss Cowell said, "we just try to improve what is there."

Her daily class includes high school students from Victoria and other Island points.

Almost all of the class members are also in the cast of State of Seige, the summer production at the university.

The students begin their morning's work with a speech class in the Green Room near the Phoenix Theatre, on Gordon Head campus.

After lunch they take drama class from Robert Hedley, who is directing the Albert Camus play which opens at the theatre Aug. 15, with two complete casts of high school students.

At night, there are rehearsals.

"I do a great deal of work with movement, emotion, mime," said Miss Cowell.

"I don't put too much time on static exercises.
Drama always comes into the lessons.

"Emotion is a valuable tool in use of the voice.
The voice accompanies movement, so I have to include movement to do the job properly."

A girl in shorts and T-shirt sat primly on a chair in the middle of the room.

The door burst open, and a bashful young man entered.

"Twenty-six, thirty-five, forty-one," she said eyebrows raised. He kicked shyly at the floor.

"One, two, three?" she asked. After a moment's consideration she admitted "nine, five, seven."

Suddenly the boy went on bended knee before her, his hand holding an invisible object that looked suspiciously like a ring.

"Thirty-four, sixty-seven eighty-two," he suggested.

She thought about it for a moment. But then, with a toss of her head, she commanded "ten, eleven, twelve."

He rose, looked sadly into the distance, and started away, shuffling his feet, and muttering
"eighty-three, fifty-six . . . ninety-four."

The scene was complete. There was no doubt of the situation, the characters, or the result.

The conversation was realistic. Except that the only words used were meaningless numbers.

"When words are not used, the quality of the voice becomes very important," said Miss Cowell.

Teacher Jane Cowell, Brian Fitzpatrick, exercising.

She was trained at Central School of Speech and Drama, and has taught at a state school.

"I came to North America to visit friends this summer," she commented. "After this course,
I'm going to Australia, and work my way back to England the long way."

The young, blonde teacher claims she is no
Professor Higgins.

"I don't try to erase a regional accent," she said, describing her work in a comprehensive school.

"There is an amazing number of regional accents in Britain, for the size of the country."

She said many students want to improve their voices, but retain regional accents.

With concentrated dedication, Miss Cowell's students were making a humming noise while flipping a finger over their lips, ending with r-r-rah, r-r-rah!

The exercise, with built-in vocal benefits, sounded like an imbecilic chant.

Moments later, the class was reading one of T.S. Eliot's cat poems.

Sprawled about on the floor, on sofas, in easy chairs, they read together, stopped, and read separately.

Then, one student after another would read a line, with other students deciding whether the voice was light, medium, or heavy.

And as they judged, they developed their ear for the color of voice. And again they read in chorus, sometimes all together, sometimes boys, sometimes girls.

"I'm in love with British Columbia," said Miss Cowell, her face to the sunlight.

"This country has the call of the wilderness for most of us in Britain."

A student sat in a chair, another student came running in through the door.

The excited student grabbed the arm of his friend, and tried to pull him out the door. The gym is burning, the gym is burning, he gestured.

But all he said was "thirty-six, seventy-two, twenty-one!"

Sunday, August 14, 1966

There is often, I think, disillusionment in revisiting scenes of the past. Except maybe a rifle match. Somehow riflemen have a faculty for going on forever.

With Swedish Calm and an Old-Fashioned Rifle

Gunnar Westling Whipped Odds Of 1,300 to One

There was the merest flutter of movement in the windflags as we strolled up to the firing point, to view a line of prone, khaki clad figures banging away in quiet concentration at targets a thousand yards away. A performance equivalent to hitting an ash can at more than half a mile.

This final stage of the last match was about finished, and those who were through were collecting their gear, others already headed for the statistical office to see the results.

Now and again, from under some broad brimmed felt hat, a familiar face lit with sudden recognition. One was Dr. Jimmy Hatter of the provincial fish and wildlife branch, there with his inspector from Nelson, Joe Gibault.

Then I spotted Joe's younger brother, Paul, whom I hadn't seen in years. A trio who came by, burdened with their haversacks, telescopes and rifles were unique. One was Jim Davidson of West Vancouver who first lined up his sights on a target back in 1908 (with the Winnipeg Rifles) and shot at Bisley 62 years ago when he was but 16!

The youngster with him was Charlie Lee, also 78, an ex-federal fisheries officer now living at Kelowna. The third was Major A. E. (Badger) Evans, a year older, who told me he was living at 634 Simecoe here in Victoria. Badger for years was one of Canada's top experts on military small arms. In fact, I think he wrote the manual on the subject. Anyway he was 43 years a soldier by the time he finished with the Second World War. Of course, if you take into consideration that he was born in the army, went to an army school, and was a "badger" (a boy soldier) at 15 — then he was 58 years on the books!

It was years ago, on this same Blair Range, that I remember a group of us chatting with Lord Alexander (then Governor-General) when the late Lattie Collins, by way of introduction, remarked "and here comes the famous Badger Evans." I noticed the glint of recognition in the GG's eye as they shook hands, and his murmured "Ah, a boy soldier." Proving he was one of the rare few who knew the Hindustani connotation.

It was as I eyed these three cheery musketeers that I made the quick mental calculation that their ages totalled 235 years! As I said, riflemen seem to go on forever.

However, there was one in particular that I wanted to find, and I asked if Gunnar Westling was around.

"He's up there in the parking lot, standing by his car," said someone. Off I went.

Seems at matches in days gone by I was always finding Gunnar standing by his car; especially at lunch hour, when he usually had a primus stove going in the car trunk, and some wieners merrily boiling. If the ritual was unvarying, so was my approach. Somehow I always ended up with one myself!

It was years ago that the London Times said of Gunnar: "He looks like someone's favorite uncle." Personally I always figured he looked like a Swedish Mr. Pickwick, with his twinkling-eyed, benign smile. Gunnar always has the expression of a man who refuses to believe there is any harm in the world. Physically of course he is chunky and barrel-chested, his powerful hands show the marks of his trade — welding. He bears them on his body, too, where over the years hot metal has splashed him.

Gunnar's background is simply told. Originally from the lush alpine valleys of Sweden's province of Dalarna (where they have mined copper since Viking times) Gunnar came to Vancouver around 1928, married his wife Gertrude in 1937, and today their 23-year-old son, Kenneth, is with the Royal Bank in Vancouver.

It must be about 30 years ago since I first met him, about the time he was trying his hand at pistol matches, which I had a hand in organizing for the B.C. Rifle Association. Then, now, Gunnar's strong point was his happy disposition. Win or lose, he always smiled, which, some say, is the sure mark of an expert, or a man about to become one.

It was a couple of years after his introduction to the handgun that he took up the full bore — the service rifle. Here of course he met a whole new set of factors. Like the solid-looking haze of summer heat, which shows up in the 'scope like a restless undersea current; and rain, through which the bullet etches its course in a vapor trail. Then of course wind, in all its devilish eccentricities which, at long ranges, can force you to aim at your neighbor's target in order to plant a bullet on your own! The fact that it also arcs 40 feet in the air in doing so, is a novel complication.

However, as Gunnar was studying all this, he was also occasionally winning matches. In smiling, non-committal fashion reaching one plateau after another, first in individual matches, then in team events, until finally he reached the national matches at Ottawa.

He got there in tough elimination, which provides the winners in every province an annual cost-free trip to Ottawa's Connaught ranges. There the provincial experts are whittled down to a national team to represent Canada at Bisley the following year.

Bisley is synonymous with the complex of ranges near Woking in England's county of Surrey where top shooters from Commonwealth countries vie with the best in Britain's armed forces for the marksman's final accolade.

Following this pattern, it was after six years of perseverance that Gunnar landed in England with the Canadian team in 1954. The year 1960 saw him back again.

In the scores of important individual and team events that mark the weeks of Bisley shooting none attracts more attention than the Queen's Prize, an event started (at Wimbledon) back in 1860 when Queen Victoria innovated the national matches by firing the opening shot from a Whitworth rifle.

Thus by happy chance, the second time Gunnar made Canada's Bisley team, it was centennial year, an occasion which, by its significance, drew a bigger than usual attendance with something like 2,000 shooters registered for the events. But not ordinary shooters. Every man was an expert, picked by a rigorous system of selection from 26 different Commonwealth countries ranging from Nyazaland to Australia.

It was along with 1,300 others (including 30 or 40 women) that Gunnar Westling entered The Queen's that centennial year. If he had any misgivings about the odds of 1,300 to 1, he probably didn't show through his bland and innocent smile. Neither did he worry about the fact that his rifle was beginning to be regarded as a relic from the past.

For now most shooters were beginning to pin their faith to the No. 4 rifle, either in .303 or chambered for the newer .765 rimless cartridge. Gunnar's "hipe" (as the old time sergeants would scream) was the 1914 short model, Lee Enfield with the wood clear up to the muzzle. The arm with which old soldiers (when they were young soldiers) demonstrated the rapid fire "mad minute," that caused Von Kluck to claim (at the battle of the Marne) that every British soldier seemed armed with a machine gun.

Thus the picture of the 53-year-old Vancouver welder with his 48-year-old model gun, trudging to the firing line for the opening phase of the Queen's; a match where they don't kid around, judging by the ruthless process of elimination.

You fire seven shots at 200 yards, 7 at 300 and another 7 at 600. When scores are tabulated, the top scoring 300 contestants go to the second stage. Which meant, in 1960, a thousand disillusioned starters picked up their gear and headed for the showers. But Gunnar wasn't among them. In quiet fashion he and old Betay had held their own to stay in the running. Top scorer, if you are interested, was Lt. Col. J. G. C. Croft of England's famed Devonian Rifle Club. A New Zealander, A. Churcher, was second and Lt. Col. R. E. W. Johnson of England, F. H. Morgan of Rhodesia and R. Barras of South Africa tied for third place.

As if to add to the tension, a day or two elapsed before the lucky 300 arranged themselves on the firing line for the hazards of the second stage; 10 shots at 300 yards, 10 at 500 and 10 at 600.

This time another Devonian clubman, Lt. Col. D. E. Elford was first, with Major S. Armour of the Royal Marines second, and P. W. Finlason of New Zealand, third.

These first three all scored 146, the relative value of their shots giving them 1, 2 and 3. The next seven on the list got 145's — including Miss R. A. Crawford, the only woman winner of the event in a hundred years — and Gunnar Westling.

Again the relentless elimination which found only the top scoring 100 going to the last stage. So

The tourist season is here again and it seems that half the population of Victoria is going on tour and the other half would like to guide them, though they may never have been further away than Winnipeg. A guide's job sounds easy and pleasant and it has its point, some rather sharp ones. Let me tell you some of my experiences.

By VIOLET WILSON

When I was in England, taking tours onto the Continent, I usually met any tourists arriving from Canada or the States at their port of landing and expected to find them in the ship's lounge, where they had been told to wait for me. This first meeting is always an awkward one for the guide. Every eye is turned upon you, giving you a most cold and critical once-over. You are never what anyone expected, certainly not the girls, who had been hoping for a handsome young man. During the voyage friends and enemies have already been made, but no matter how disunited they may have been on board, the group is now united in its dread of the unknown guide.

First I check my group. Two missing; my heart sinks. Have you ever tried to locate anyone on a newly-docked ship? Fighting my way against the crowd, I finally reach the purser's office and put out a call on the loudspeaker then, struggling back to my waiting group, I check their passports. One old lady has invariably packed hers in her "big bag" — she thought it would be safer there. Well, it's safe all right, but how are we to find that bag? The stewards and I search unavailingly. As the two missing ones have now arrived (just an hour late) and quite unconcerned, I decide to take my now very impatient group ashore and trust to a sympathetic emigration officer, used to the peculiarities of tourists, to let my old lady get to her bag, by now in the Customs shed.

If I am lucky I get them all aboard the train on time. I am privately rejoicing that no one has fallen on shipboard, that there are no broken arms or legs to cope with, and that, so far, no one has had a heart attack. You'd be surprised how often these things happen. A hot meal and a drink restores our tempers and all relax to enjoy the lovely English countryside.

As I move among my group I am given their life stories, with the most astonishingly intimate details, all their troubles, their woes, their hopes, and I am shown their pictures. I have looked at more pictures of babies than you can imagine existed. I have learned to understand and worry about the population explosion — I have seen it! One of the great trials of a guide is the looking at and admiring of pictures. Every tourist has a camera. Some have three or four and they all take pictures, from the wrong point of view, in the wrong light at the wrong time of day. Why they never buy the lovely prints available, I don't know.

After a few days in London I am able to size up my group. I find who are the complainers, who are the steady ones, the intelligent ones and the shoppers. Some people travel thousands of miles just to shop. Then there are the wanderers — always a problem. One trip I had a woman who had "a thing" about cemeteries, as I learned later. The first time she disappeared was at Edinburgh Castle, and it took us three hours and the police force as well as the castle guides to find her. I took her on a six-weeks' tour of Europe, and it is thanks to her that I know so many of the cemeteries so well, although there are other places in which I should have preferred to spend my time.

In London we were often joined by other groups of individual travellers. I always welcomed these newcomers with their different points of view. There were sometimes highly cultured colored people, charming and picturesque. The tour can be ruined, on such an occasion, by a South African expressing, loudly as usual, his unpopular point of view. A situation like that requires great tact on the part of the guide and of everyone else. On one occasion my driver came to blows with such a man — and that was a problem!

Before leaving London on one trip, I had been warned that one of the women coming with us was difficult. She was a well-known English BBC broadcaster who had been on the air for years. She played up to her reputation as a star, but she was agreeable. If a little superior in manner, and very noticeably careful of her pennies, but she was fun, so I rather forgot the warning.

One of the problems of European travel is the shortage of single rooms, for no matter how many you reserve there are never enough when you arrive. When we had to double up I did it on a rotary system and everyone took their turn. It would have been easier, of course, if I could have mixed the sexes — and who knows, I mightn't have had so many complaints! I had left my radio queen to the last, and no doubt she had thought she was safe, but this night her turn had come. When I broke the news to her that she must share a room, she quite simply lay down in the middle of the hotel lounge and screamed ... literally screamed.

It was a big, crowded lounge and everyone in it stood up to see and hear what was happening. I tried to quieten her and pull her to her feet. She was a short, fat woman, impossible to lift. She banged her feet on the floor and cried: "I won't, I won't — you forget who I am."

The manager appeared — I had known him for years and never seen a sign of temper before — now he shouted at me: "Get her out, get her out." "I can't," I said, "I can't."

This kept up for some time. I threatened to turn her off the tour: I threatened the police, and just then one walked in — but he couldn't move her either. The manager started at me again: "Get her out."

Furious myself, by now, I said: "This is your hotel — you get her out," and telling her where she could go, metaphorically, as well as physically, I walked out.

An hour later when I returned, all was quiet. The manager smilingly invited me into his office for a drink and told me the end of the tale. The policeman had sent for a doctor, who had given her a shot, and she had been carried up to the much despised double room, where she then was, sleeping with the doctor's bill beside her!

I had some hysterical women on another trip, but that time they had my sympathy. We were crossing the Brenner Pass, the season was late and there was an unusual lot of snow on the road and near the top of the Pass we found ourselves in a storm. Those huge buses can be very frightening as they hang their great behinds over the edges of the cliffs, when they make the narrow turns on the mountain roads and it is particularly terrifying when you can't see the edges of the cliff in a storm. Taking one very sharp turn I really wondered whether we'd make it. Suddenly, with bloodcurdling screams, three women simultaneously threw themselves onto the floor of the bus. One husband did make a feeble attempt to get his wife up; the others, too cowardly to move, just sat wiping their brows as they tried to hide themselves behind their papers while the screams continued. Other women were beginning to cry and I could feel the panic spreading.

We couldn't stop, we couldn't go back, we had to go on. So, trembling with fright myself, I went down the aisle and gave each one of those three women a really hard slap on the cheek, the classical cure for hysteria.

It worked, and there was absolute silence. Then, turning to the microphone I announced: "If anyone even speaks in this bus until we are safely down, he will get the same treatment." Two silent hours later, safely down, I took the exhausted and nerve-racked crowd into the first pub we came to, and gave them all a much needed brandy ... on the company I might add! It was on this tour that we had a well, more than middle-aged woman who, when I went up to speak to her for the first time, said: "I must consult Father."

Looking around for a man of about her own age, as some people do refer to their mates in this fashion, I saw she was beckoning to a very young man, dressed in a gay checked sports coat and hung with cameras, glasses, etc. I stared, and to my astonishment she introduced him as "Father."

It turned out that he was her son, and in her maternal pride in his obviously very newly-achieved priesthood she not only referred to him as "Father," but addressed him as such, much to the amusement of the group.

On another tour after a very stormy crossing on which nearly everyone was seasick, I discovered, on our arrival at Calais, that our own Continental bus was not to be found. I tried to phone London; it was Sunday and all offices were closed. I tried to phone Boulogne, but the lines were down because of the storm ... I could only wait for developments. I had a group of mill girls

Each year thousands of people drive through the little town of Yale, British Columbia, the entrance to the beautiful highway winding through the grandeur of the Fraser Canyon, not realizing that they had just passed one of the most historic sites in the province. For here stands the first church to be built by the early pioneers who moved into the wilds of western Canada.

It has other claims to a place in history, for on his voyage of discovery down the Fraser River to the blue waters of the Strait of Georgia, Simon Fraser and his party of canoe men portaged past the seething caldron, known as Hell's Gate, and pitched tent on the grassy slope above the river where St. John's Church now stands.

Later he reached the ocean but turned quickly back up river when met by a large party of hostile Indians who showed every indication of attacking his party.

In 1808, the site was chosen by the Hudson's Bay Fur Trading Company for the erection of a fort to protect the trappers who had completed the long journey from the hinterlands of British Columbia to sell their furs. This point was the terminal of the Brigade Trail.

The first known word of a church at Yale is contained in a letter written during the Fraser Valley gold rush by Colonel Clement Moody (Commandant of the Regiment of Royal Engineers stationed in B.C., and lieutenant-governor of the new colony), to Arthur Blackwood (assistant to the Colonial Secretary, Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton, later Lord Lytton), dated Feb. 1, 1860, following a visit to the mining community at Yale.

Col. Moody said, in part: "I have since heard that on one of the sandbars a log hut is now in building by the miners themselves. No clergyman is among them."

Sometime during the same year the Rev. A. D. Pringle came to the area for a time, and administered in Yale and Hope, as well as in Langley. In 1860 the Rev. William Burton Crickmer came to Yale and proceeded to erect a permanent church. This was done expeditiously, and the first service was held on June 10, 1860, with Bishop Hills preaching the sermon. Governor Douglas, Col. Moody and other leading men of the colony were included in the congregation. In 1862 a larger church building was begun and completed, but not before a severe storm blew down some of the unfinished structure.

Later a parsonage was erected nearby, but has since disappeared. The church has remained substantially the same, apart from an extensive renovation in 1953. The restored church was rededicated during the New Westminster Diocesan 75th Anniversary celebrations, at which time the Most Reverend Walter Foster Barfoot, Primate of All Canada, was the celebrant and preacher.

The service registers show that only once was the church used for an ordination service, when on the Feast of St. Michael and All Angels, Sept. 29, 1907, the retired archdeacon of Vancouver, the Venerable James Thompson, was ordained to the priesthood.

During the difficult years of the early 1930s, with the mining population at Yale greatly reduced, and the village of Hope still struggling to establish itself as a community, the Rev. Heber Greene administered to an area which included Agassiz, Hope, Yale and Princeton.

Since that time Hope has become sufficiently established, first as a village, and now as a town, to carry on with its own priest who is also responsible for clerical administration at Yale.

The years 1888-1915 witnessed a close association between the Church of St. John the Divine at Yale with the All Hallows' School. This boarding and day school for girls was staffed by members of the Community of All Hallows, Ditchingham, England.

GOD'S HOUSE IN THE WILDERNESS

For some time the sisters confined their energies to the education of Indian girls, but later additional buildings enabled them to include "white" boarders, and the Canadian School for white girls followed the lines of similar girls' schools in operation in England at that time. The school maintained its own chaplain, but used the facilities of the Church of St. John the Divine for church services.

The difficulties created by war-time conditions necessitated the transfer of the Indian girls to St. George's School at Lytton, and the final closing of the Canadian School for white girls.

Several of the church ornaments are a testimony of this association with the school.

It was in June of 1860 that the church was built close to the site of the fort and was officially opened June 19 by Bishop George Hills.

For 105 years this little church, set in a backdrop of trees and overlooking the turbulent Fraser River, has watched the march of history in this province.

It was about this time that the great Cariboo Gold Rush began and Yale was the gateway to the rich gold creeks of the interior. The town itself was a roaring metropolis, overflowing with every type of humanity, including gamblers and desperadoes, honky-tonk girls, freighters and thousands of miners seeking the golden metal.

Among these miners there was a strong hard core of Cornish and Welsh from the coal mines of England and they were a breed of men who took their religion seriously. Throughout the gold-mining regions of the province there still remain the traces of their camp meeting grounds and rustic places of worship. These were the people, among others, who attended and maintained the little frontier church at Yale.

It was in its shadow that the Royal Engineers, brought out from England at the request of Sir James Douglas, Governor of Vancouver Island, laid their plans for the construction of a wagon road through the deep and hazardous Fraser Canyon.

It witnessed the arrival of the first fast stage coach to complete the run from Soda Creek to Yale, a distance of 400 miles, in four days carrying a payload of bullion and passengers.

When the gold rush came to an end, the old church settled down to a long quiet period

MURIEL WILSON'S  THOUGHT FOR FOOD

The gathering of wild berries is a custom older than our country. We don't know how closely the Indians guarded their favorite hunting grounds or whether a battle was ever fought over a blueberry. But when the land belonged to the Indian they subsisted on berries in season and sometimes on little else.

Blueberries were especially esteemed, besides eating them fresh in season they were sun dried and stored against winter famine. Besides their availability—large areas were literally covered with this fruit—instinct seems to have told them that this small blueberry was good for them. Now we know that of all the berries, cultivated blueberries rank first in vitamin A content and second in food energy. They contain vitamin C and contribute useful minerals, such as iron to the diet. Of interest to weight watchers is the fact that blueberries are low in calories. Half a cup contain only 42 calories.

The wild blueberry was small and dry ... now thanks to breeding and cross breeding and improved methods of growing, our cultivated blueberries are always reliably blue and often twice as large as any grown on a wild bush.

No fruit can be all things to all people, but cultivated blueberries come pretty close. They can brighten up breakfast, lighten up lunch, make dinner memorable and give character and nutrition to in-between snacks. In season—and the peak is right now—they can be eaten by the handful right out of a big bowl in the middle of the kitchen table, or with ice cream or plain cream. Children love them with cold cereal and mothers put them in fruit salad. In or out of season, cultivated blueberries go into the making of muffins, pancakes, pies and tarts. They ring the changes for shortcake, upside-down cake, steamed puddings and old-fashioned Blueberry Grunt and Flummery. These are only a few of the ways these wonder berries can be used. Right now they are at their peak of perfection. There is absolutely no waste to a basket of blueberries ... no stems, hulls or peel. They are good solid value. They freeze perfectly.

I am continually asked for large family-size recipes. This recipe for Blueberry Oatmeal Muffins makes 24 large muffins. For a small family the recipe is easily divided in half or make the whole recipe and freeze the surplus muffins for later.

Bride's Corner

FROZEN BLUEBERRIES may be used in any recipe calling for fresh berries.

BLUEBERRIES are less perishable than most berries. They will keep well in the refrigerator for several days. Wet berries spoil more quickly than dry berries, so do not wash until just before using.

BRUSH THE BOTTOM of an unbaked crust for blueberry pie with white of egg. Let stand five minutes before adding the filling. This prevents a soggy bottom crust.

A DASH OF LEMON sharpens the flavor of any blueberry dish.

LEMON AND A WHIFFLE of cinnamon improves blueberry pie.

BLUEBERRY SAUCE FOR ICE CREAM ... Mix together 1½ Tbsp. cornstarch, ¾ cup sugar, and a pinch of salt in a saucepan. Gradually add 1 cup water. Cook till thick, stirring constantly. Add 2 cups blueberries, 2 Tbsp. lemon juice and ¼ tsp. nutmeg. Simmer 5 minutes. Serve hot or cold.

PAGE 2—The Daily Colonist, Sunday, August 14, 1966

BLUEBERRY OATMEAL MUFFINS ... ¾ cup vegetable shortening, 1 cup firmly packed light brown sugar, 2 eggs, 4 cups sifted all-purpose flour, 2 cups quick oats, 4 tsp. baking powder, 1½ tsp. baking soda, 1 tsp. salt, 2 tsp. blended pumpkin pie spice, 2½ cups buttermilk (or sour milk), 3 cups blueberries, rinsed and drained, and ½ cup orange marmalade or apricot jam for glaze. Cream shortening until light and fluffy, stir in sugar and eggs. Mix sifted flour, oats, baking powder, salt, baking soda and spice. Add dry ingredients alternately with buttermilk, beginning and ending with dry ingredients. Lightly fold in blueberries. Fill greased muffin tins ¾ full. Bake in a preheated oven ... 375 degrees F. for about 25 to 30 minutes or until lightly browned. Remove muffins from pans. While still hot brush the tops with marmalade or jam (use a pastry brush). Serve while warm and pass the butter.

Muffins ask for a quick, light hand ... beating or over stirring gives you peaks and tunnels. Over stirring also crushes the berries to give you a blue batter instead of a golden muffin juicily studded with deep blue.

BLUEBERRY MELON SALAD ... remove seeds from 4 cantaloup halves. Scoop out pulp with a melon ball cutter (a coffee spoon serves the purpose if you have no melon cutter). Line melon shells with watercress or any salad green. Add a mound of cottage cheese, surround with melon balls and top with blueberries.

For a dessert omit the greens in the melon shell and fill with vanilla ice cream and top with the melon balls and blueberries. For a dressing for either the salad or dessert a whipped jelly sauce is lovely.

WHIPPED JELLY SAUCE ... melt 1-3 cup blueberry or any tart jelly over boiling water. Cool to lukewarm. Gradually beat jelly and 1 Tbsp. lemon juice into a 3-ounce package Philadelphia cream cheese. Fold in 1 tsp. grated orange rind and ½ cup heavy cream, whipped. Chill until ready to serve. Yield 1½ cups dressing.

If you'd like to be adventurous and serve something really different, make some Blueberry Sherbet.

BLUEBERRY SHERBET ... 2 cups cultivated blueberries, rinsed and drained, 1 cup water, 1 cup granulated sugar, ¼ cup lemon juice, 1 envelope unflavored gelatine, 1 cup heavy cream, whipped, and 1 tsp. Angostura Bitters. In a saucepan combine blueberries, water and sugar. Bring to a boil and simmer for 10 minutes. Soak gelatine in lemon juice for five minutes. Stir gelatine into blueberry mixture until dissolved. Cool then freeze until mixture is mushy. Beat with an electric mixer until smooth and fluffy. Fold in whipped cream and aromatic flavoring. Freeze until firm, at least six hours. Yield six to eight servings.

Blueberries have eye appeal. Perhaps that is one of the reasons we love to cook with them They appeal to a cook's artistry.

PEAK of SEASON for WILD BLUEBERRY

Blueberry Crumble is a symphony in blue and gold ... rich blue underneath and a golden topping.

BLUEBERRY CRUMBLE ... put 3 cups blueberries in a buttered baking dish, add 6 Tbsp. sugar, the juice of 1 lemon and ¼ tsp. cinnamon. Combine ½ cup sifted flour ¼ cup butter or margarine, 6 Tbsp. sugar and ¼ tsp. salt. Work the mixture to a crumbly consistency. Sprinkle mixture over blueberries and bake in a 350-degree F oven for about 40 minutes. Serve with pouring cream or vanilla ice cream. On taste alone, our Crumble would take top honors.

Blueberry Bread Pudding is a fine family type recipe but delicious enough for a company meal.

BLUEBERRY BREAD PUDDING ... wash a quart of blueberries and put in a saucepan with 1 cup sugar and heat and stir until the crusts from butter each all with four or necessary to fit layers of fruit bread, beginning Bake in a 350-c 20 minutes. C sweetened whip grated nutmeg.

It is easy berries ... the Just pack them half an inch between the berries as blueberries will pancakes some home-made blue!

hints from Heloise

DEAR HELOISE:

After all these years, I have finally learned how to keep myself cool in the summer and warm in the winter. I find nothing worse than crawling between cold sheets in the winter or gasping for breath (on the same sheets) in the summer.

You know those plastic detergent bottles, rubbing-alcohol bottles and all the other plastic bottles that our household products come in? I save 'em!

When it's cold, I fill these bottles with hot water from the faucet. I screw the caps on tightly, and put a few of the bottles in bed about 30 minutes before I crawl in.

Ohhhhh ... the comfort of having your tootsies warm!

During hot weather, I just fill the bottles about nine-tenths full of cool water, and put them in the freezer compartment. An hour before I go to bed, I put these iced bottles between the sheets. Not only are the sheets cool, but portions of the mattress are also. What price comfort?

Also, did you know that you could empty a box of salt into an iron skillet, heat the salt, pour it into a cloth bag, tie a knot in the end, and use it as a foot warmer?

I also found out that during the hot weather you could put a cloth bag full of salt in an ice tray, and let it get cold during the day.

This makes a wonderful bag! If you don't want cold, cold, cold, put the bag of salt in the bottom of your bed during the day.

DEAR HELOISE:

My three children daily seemed to tell me I took three milk, and added drops of different color to each, green, and blue. Now, at mealtime

blueberry Bread Pudding is a fine family recipe but delicious enough for a meal.

BLUEBERRY BREAD PUDDING . . . wash 1 lb. of blueberries and put in a saucepan with 1 cup sugar and 1 Tbsp. water. Place over low heat and simmer for about five minutes. Trim the crusts from eight thin slices of bread and butter each slice generously. Line a baking dish with four or five slices bread, trim slices if necessary to fit dish. Fill the dish with alternate layers of fruit, juice and remaining slices of bread, beginning and ending with fruit and juice. Bake in a 350-degree Fahrenheit oven for about 30 minutes. Chill thoroughly and serve with sweetened whipped cream flavored with freshly grated nutmeg.

It is easy to home-freeze cultivated blueberries . . . they don't even need to be washed. Just pack them into freezing containers, leaving half an inch headspace. When time to use them, the berries need only to be rinsed. Frozen blueberries will taste pretty good in blueberry pancakes some chilly November morning or in a home-made blueberry pie in January.

FRESH BLUEBERRIES in muffins for breakfast, in salads for lunch, in refreshing homemade sherbet for dinner. Have blueberries meal after meal during the all-too-short season.

Just made a darling cover for that extra roll of tissue in the bathroom. Here's how:

Cut off a large plastic bleach bottle about five inches up from the bottom of the bottle. When it is cut, turn it upside down (solid side up). Measure nylon net to fit around the container and glue it on. Then take a piece of velvet ribbon long enough to go around the container, gather a net ruffle onto the ribbon, and glue the ribbon around the bottom of the container. Add a small flower. Now you have an attractive decoration to cover the tissue. Mrs. Jim Gerth

This clever gift-wrapping hint was suggested to me by my sister-in-law! She selected some small gold buttons with rhinestone centers and put florist's wire through the shank of each, twisting the wire ends to make a stem. These were then inserted in bows on packages to add sparkle and beauty. The buttons may be used later by the persons receiving the gifts. Theodora Cook

ABSORBING IDEA

DEAR HELOISE:
I live in an apartment hotel and I have always lined the hydrator in the refrigerator with foil. I had trouble with cucumbers, peppers, tomatoes, lemons and oranges mildewing, so I pointed this out to the maintenance man.

He told me that if I would line the hydrator with paper towels, they would absorb the moisture and keep the fruit from getting fungus on it. I have done this, and it works! Please pass this on to your other readers.

Mrs. D. V. E.

You are exactly right. And, another little thing I would like to point out . . . are you aware that you can put newspapers in the bottom (they absorb lots of moisture), then lay one layer of paper towels on top, thus saving paper towels? I have done this for six months, and it works beautifully.

A Project to Help Indians Qualify For Life in Competitive Economy

By JIM HOFFMAN

Along a dry, gravel road in North Central British Columbia an old green Ford creaks along, its body sagging under the weight of a swaying load, its open windows framing a wave of dark hands which playfully beat spotty patterns on the outside dusty doors.

Inside, a young, freckled-faced man, an Oblate Brother, with a huge mop of red hair, speaks in a heavy Irish accent:

"Now boys, when we arrive, I want you to unpack and then clean up for supper—in the cookhouse. We'll start with haircuts right after eating. And I need some volunteers to clean up the school bus for tomorrow morning."

Meanwhile, at a Montreal cocktail party, a Roman Catholic priest, a Texan with all the finesse of the South, explains to a small group:

"It's more than just an educational effort, it has its economic and social aspects as well. It aims to bring modern Christian social teaching to the boom in B.C.'s northern interior, and is especially strong on such things as integration and development of the Indians. But right now we need help—physically and financially."

These two, the Irish brother and the Texan priest, though widely different and miles apart, demonstrate the variety and diversity that are part of an ambitious project in Northern B.C. The project is simple and complex: simple, because its immediate goals include the erection and running of a resident high school and junior college; complex, because underlying the whole project are plans of total community development—from supermarkets and co-op housing to a seminar and a cathedral. It hopes some day to expand into a not too miniature community centred around a full-fledged university. The name of the project: Domano.

It all began somewhere in the late fifties just after the newly consecrated Fergus O'Grady was made head of vicariate apostolic of Prince Rupert, an area extending from the coast to the Rockies and comprising 135,000 square miles. In it, was a flock of more than 10,000 Roman Catholics, a large number of whom were Carrier Indians.

This flock, scattered as it was in such remote places as Fort McLeod, Smithers, and Shelly, presented a problem not unknown to the missionary Oblates, who, since the 1860's, have walked, canoed, snowshoed and flown directly to their charges in the remote northern B.C. Tradition has always pictured the Oblate father as a bearded, hardy soul selflessly bringing the cross to every village and camp in the territory. There are few places that lack the typical mission chapel—a small, wooden frame structure nestled between the trees at the edge of a choppy lake, gently raising its spire among the northern trees.

But now, the great increase in population in the vicariate, along with the booming Northland which was bringing people and wealth to cities like Prince George, were creating a new situation. Loggers, farmers, and hunters were now giving way to the businessman, the insurance salesman and the white collar worker. The rugged frontier life that the older Oblate fathers knew was being replaced by modern middle class life, with its mechanization, its specialization and its urbanization.

Now, the need was for large, modern schools, equipped to bring the youth in line with modern academic and vocational training, especially among the Indians, who, despite a new government vocational centre at Prince George, often found it hard to acquire the Grade 10 standing necessary to qualify. Churches, too, were needed: the vicariate was probably one of the few dioceses in the world without a cathedral.

Many people, however, were skeptical, and when O'Grady began to buy up thousands of forested acres several miles south of Prince George, for the purpose of erecting a high school and junior college, they waved their hands in disbelief. Even among his own lieutenants, his fellow Oblates, there was some feeling of hesitation: supplies and labor were expensive and money was scarce.

At this point, O'Grady, probably reflecting the doggedness (and luck) of his Irish background, moved into action. While others would have felt it prudent to wait for a more favorable time, O'Grady, typically, set things moving. He purchased a construction fleet from the completed Kitimat project, employed a few mechanics and drivers to operate them, and soon the gentle swish of the nearby Fraser River gave way to rumblings of heavy cats and shovels as they cleared their way through acres of spruce and fir.

His next step was to meet with the local labor councils to get their permission to allow him to employ his own non-union labor. The reasons was he simply couldn't afford to pay any salary, except in a few cases where it was strictly necessary, such as diesel mechanics and several special machine operators. Permission was granted.

By now O'Grady was utilizing to the full an old approach, but one newly emphasized by Pope John XXIII and the second Vatican Council: the increased participation of the laity in church matters—the lay apostolate.

He appealed far and wide, enjoining fellow Christians to donate a year of their time and talents to the church at Domano. He, with several special assistants, appeared in western and eastern Canada, the U.S., England, Ireland. He approached teaching nun's orders with promises of spiritual adventure and frontier salvation. He regaled trainees at nursing homes with romantic tales of snowswept fields, firelit cabins, and, of course, men.

The Bishop's own warm, magnetic personality too was a great attraction. An inveterately cheerful man, with a full, grinning face, he could prove a hard man to refuse. One couple, the Van Nootens, from near Toronto, whom he approached just as they were married, decided to make their honeymoon a one-way trip to Prince George — and Domano. They ended up staying several years — both of them teaching high school, and never tired of telling about the slightly overly optimistic picture the Bishop painted of Domano.

He tersely made reference to the many "structures" in progress and that sidewalks unfortunately, for their city feet were still only in the planning stage, and they should bring good, waterproof boots. In fact, the Van Nootens arrived to find that most of the structures were construction sheds or bunkhouses, the school and college merely a huge mudsoaked hole in the ground, and as for sidewalks, they would look rather odd running between stacks of lumber and piles of earth.

But they managed to make their small log cabin comfortable and soon became a self-appointed welcoming committee for the many other lay apostles (as they were now called) who were arriving from Nova Scotia, Montreal, Pennsylvania, County Mayo, Ireland, California, New York. Many a lone, young lass, fresh from teacher's college, would arrive at the railway station, tired and exhausted after days of travelling, to be introduced to B.C.'s "frontier" by a cheery welcome at the station from the Van Nootens, followed by coffee at the log cabin.

In September, 1961, the Bishop thought it opportune to begin his high school, Prince George High. He had the pupils, many of whom were Indians from places like Fort St. James and Burns Lake, who would live in residence, and he had teachers: lay volunteers like the Van Nootens, receiving only room (such as it was) and board and the $25 a month — "for toothpaste and cigarettes." Only one thing was missing: a school.

At the Domano site, only four hostels were completed. These provided board for the Indian resident students and some of the lay apostles. Temporary quarters for the high school were found right in Prince George City — at St. Mary's Catholic Elementary School, where there was already a sizable enrolment. Somehow, with the generosity of all concerned, along with the ingenuity of the school authorities who were able to convert extra rooms, a lunchroom, auditorium to classrooms, classes were held according to schedule. One teacher from California evaded sub zero chills and lack of space by taking his small class of three outside to his car. There, in comfy seats, with the heater purring, they held their guidance lessons.

It was a big event in June, 1963, when the high school, up to Grade 13, completed some months earlier, was officially opened. There were still mounds of bulldozed earth outside and still no sidewalks, but the main section of the school was finished, its classrooms gleamed with fresh paint, and its large auditorium was packed.

They could well be proud. Probably few high schools in history have ever enjoyed three consecutive locations, and had to endure two major moves in one academic year! At Christmas they moved, desks and all, up to Domano, but into the large living rooms of the seven complete hostels since the classroom block was behind schedule. Then, in May, all was packed up again and shifted to its final destination — in time for final exams and graduation.

At the graduation ceremony, there were the usual speakers, happy parents and bouquets of flowers, but one event, though timeworn and expected, stood out as unique: the valedictory.

He stood quite calmly, a clean cut youth with short, dark hair and relaxed eyes, his dark suit glistened in the lights. He said how proud he and his classmates were of the school and how thankful they were to the "wonderful people" whose real sacrifice made it possible.

The boy was Indian, one of Domano's first graduates, and, as he spoke, he seemed to reflect the words which Bishop O'Grady had spoken at the founding of the Domano project:

"We must help our Indians qualify for life in a competitive white Canadian economy. He is still belabored and bedeviled by an inferiority complex in relation to his white neighbor. He must be brought to a recognized, admitted, acceptable and proven status of equality: then we can be sure he will himself successfully compete with his white neighbor and even, let it be said, outstrip him."

Bombs, dynamite caps, and wilderness hikes, these things spell adventure to boys, and these are some of the things that members of the Metchosin Adventure and Exploration Club have encountered during the club's three and a half year history.

CHRIS PIKE'S METCHOSIN ADVENTURERS

By NANCY BROWN

Members of the club are also members of the Junior Forest Rangers, and their leader is Christopher Pike, of Rocky Point Road. At 64, Mr. Pike has more than 40 years experience in exploring remote spots on Vancouver Island, and has been active in boys work for some 20 years.

Since he started the club in November, 1962, Mr. Pike has taken members, whose ages range from 9 to 16, on monthly weekend hikes, summer and winter.

Each year, too, he has taken them on long adventure trips, which have varied from an 800-mile journey to Port Hardy and back, to a 26-mile, five-day hike, with all food and equipment on their backs, into Forbidden Plateau, and a 200-mile trip by car, boat and on foot in the Nitinat Lake country. Mr. Pike has had a life-long interest in camping, and has explored and camped in many remote places on Vancouver Island. Some years ago he was with a party of surveyors, and travelled with them from Campbell River to Battle Lake.

During the Second World War, he was a Lieutenant in the Pacific Coast Militia Rangers—recognition of his wood lore and camping experience. During this time he added to his knowledge of the country, particularly in the Sooke area.

"My aim is to teach the boys to look after themselves, and to make themselves self-reliant in difficulties," said Mr. Pike.

For many years Mr. Pike was connected with the Metchosin Cub and Scouts. He became Cub master in May, 1949, and took on the Scouts in September of the same year. He kept charge of both groups for 14 years.

In the fall of 1962 some boys asked him to start a club so that they could go hiking. He agreed if they could find other boys who would be interested. When they arrived back on his doorstep with a ready-made club, he kept his word.

"If the boys want to go to a certain place, I will take them, provided it is not too dangerous. Also, there must be something for them to learn on every hike.

"For instance I would not bother climbing with them to the top of a treeless mountain. I have always wanted my boys to be able to identify shrubs and trees, and to know their own country," said Mr. Pike.

Once a month, members of the club go for a weekend camp. Rain or shine, Mr. Pike takes them as far as the Land Rover will travel.

At the end of the trail, the boys load their packs on their backs. They take all their own food, and a complete change of clothes. Plastic tarpaulins, lanterns, saws and axes are shared among the heftier boys.

At the campsite three or four boys share a fire, but each cooks his own food. The more experienced boys help the young ones. Some weird and wonderful concoctions disappear down young throats before each becomes a proficient camp cook.

Club members do not rely upon canned or prepacked foods. In the first place weight is a factor that each considers, after one trip with a too-heavy pack.

Secondly, Mr. Pike discourages any such reliance. "It is all right for a boy to take prepared food with him, once he knows how to handle a camp fire, and to cook for himself, but I want the boys to learn how to look after themselves from start to finish, and this included cooking basic essentials."

A "mystery" bomb was found by six club members on one of these weekend hikes. Exploring along the seashore the boys — Wayne Charlton, Jimmy Brown, Norman Willey, Tom Heintzman, John Ranna, and Brian Scruton found a three-foot-long bomb.

They reported the bomb to their leader, who in turn informed the navy demolition squad. The bomb was detonated but it was some time before it was finally identified as a 200-pound U.S. aerial bomb of Second World War vintage.

A year later, within a hundred yards of where the dangerous bomb had been, five club members found another one.

This was a 250-pound aerial practice bomb, and examination by Lieut. A. W. Rowse of the navy's diving establishment, showed that it was harmless.

The Metchosin boys on that adventure were Norman Willey, David Bickerdike, Robert Jenkins, Glen Crockett and Peter Brown.

The bomb casing now stands in the clubhouse on Rocky Point Road as a souvenir.

Guns, of course, are a perpetual treasure, in a young boy's life, and Mr. Pike has spent many hours teaching the club members gun safety.

Under his instruction they have learned the workings of guns and been allowed to dismantle them. He has also taught them to reload empty shells, and allowed them to do the job themselves.

The first major trip taken by the club was during the summer of 1964, when they explored the Nitinat country.

Seven boys went on this trip. They were Tom Heintzman, Gardner McDermott, John Ranna, Larry Craig, Norman Willey, Gary and Rich Evans. At the time all of the boys were under 16. They had two leaders—Mr. Pike and his assistant Steve Friend.

They set out by Land Rover, and went around Cowichan Lake to the head of Nitinat Lake. From there they went by boat to a small bay at the

for the tour! I phoned Amiens to say we would be five hours late for the dinner we had ordered, and to Paris to tell them to keep our rooms, as we hoped to arrive around two in the morning! The curious thing about those girls was that, when things were going well they were gay and amusing, singing and laughing, kind and helpful to the older people, but they could change in a second. They were the material from which the mob is made, easily swayed and quite uncontrolled. They made me think of the women round the Paris guillotine.

I mustn't give you the impression that a guide's life is all troubles. There are many interesting and charming people travelling, but the guide doesn't have much time to enjoy them. By the time you have settled not only the bills, the disputes and the tips, there's not much time to check the luggage and this is always a headache, for invariably someone has left a bag or an overcoat behind, no matter how often reminded to look behind the door! This loss is usually discovered when you are at least 10 miles on your way, which means that while the tour waits, the guide struggles with the European telephone ... always a test of physical and mental vigor.

Then there are accounts to be kept — in currencies varying from day to day. The first tour I took I ended up owing the agency a nice little sum which more than absorbed my salary for the trip. But one learns quickly under such circumstances, and it never happened again! To be a good guide you must be as strong as a horse, adaptable, but firm when required. A knowledge of first aid comes in handy — there are always accidents of one kind or another. You must learn to suffer fools gladly, but, as in most circumstances in life, it is a sense of humor which carries you through.

camp. They took side trips from this point.

The Metchosin adventurers visited Carmanah Point, 15 miles northwest of Port Renfrew, which they had reached by way of Clo-ose. They also went to Entrance River, where at tide change the river runs out to sea over a bar, at terrific speed.

Mr. Pike and the boys saw the 80-foot Tausiat River Falls, where the Tausiat River empties into the sea over a cliff. Caves in this area were used as burial places by the Indians at one time and the boys explored the area thoroughly.

Another of the impressive sights of Vancouver Island is the blow hole which has been formed by the sea, which has tunneled under the rocks, and through an opening on the beach. This is a remote country 30 miles from Port Renfrew.

The boys saw the water shoot high into the air, as the breakers rolled in. It has been reported that the water shoots 160 feet into the air from this blow hole when conditions are right.

The following year saw 12 boys on a rugged trip to Della Falls—at 1,600 feet the falls are described as the highest in North America.

Once more Steve Friend was assistant leader, and also head cook. Youngest boy on the trip was Peter Brown, at that time only nine years old, and the other boys were his brother Jim, Tom Heintzman, Norman Willey, Glen Crockett, David
Bickerdike, Paul Johnson, Chris Van der Werdt, Gary and Ricky Evans, and Larry and Jack Craig.

This trip took nine days—three of them spent in hiking with provisions for five days on their backs.

The group took the faithful Land Rover to the lake by water taxi.

Della Falls is 13 miles in from the Lake, and the trip was accomplished through pouring rainstorms, across flooded creeks, over improved bridges, and through devil's club and salmonberry bushes so thick that the boys couldn't see their own feet.

They climbed Mount Septimus, where they found snow in July, and explored a deserted prospector's cabin, where they detonated a cache of dynamite caps, in the interests of safety.

From the top of Mount Septimus, they could see Della Falls, the Big Interior mountains, and even Great Central Lake. A tremendous panorama.

While they were on Mount Septimus a group took a hike up to Love Lake—seven miles away and uphill all the way.

This little-known lake is a beautiful sight, rimmed on three sides by sheer rock and on the other side by a juniper meadow rimmed with ice.

Last year's trip took eight club members to the northern end of Vancouver Island by car and by Land Rover.

By last year the club had affiliated with the Junior Forest Rangers, and this connection assured them access to logging roads throughout the trip.

The assistant to Mr. Pike for the 10-day, 700-mile trip was Roland Sudhues.

The exploring boys were Brian Willey, Ross
Pike, John Ranna, David Bickerdike, Robert Jenkins, Wolfgang Carolstfeldt, Jim and Peter Brown.

Highlights of this trip were the visit to the whale factory at Coal Harbor — and the subsequent meal of whale meat—and the opportunity to watch a trainload of logs being dumped into Beaver Cove.

Fishing occupied much of the club members' spare time on the trip—one caught by Jim Brown in the Nimpkish River weighed more than 3 lbs.

They also saw two bears, and watched some beavers at play.

Since their affiliation with the Junior Forest Rangers there has been even more emphasis upon woods lore. Club members are wearing badges on their uniforms that testify to this fact.

In addition to the badges gained for knowledge, three club members have won fire honor badges for fighting fires.

John Jenkins was awarded his badge for extinguishing a fire at Weir's Beach, Metchosin.
Jim and Peter Brown also received fire honor badges. Theirs were for their voluntary patrolling of Taylor Beach, Metchosin, making sure that all campers' fires were put out.

Over the winter months club members took a special survival and fire-fighting course at the Rocky Point Fire Hall.

Mr. Pike and the boys are planning this year's trip to take place during August.

They will be going to Quadra Island. They take dehydrated food and freeze-dried meat with them. They sleep under plastic tarpaulins, taking advantage of all modern methods of keeping their picks light.

Money for the club is raised through the weekly dues paid by the members, and through an annual donation from the Metchosin Recreation Commission.

ON-THE-SPOT EXPLORATIONS GIVE VINLAND SEARCH NEW DIMENSION

Reviewed by
E. D. WARD-HARRIS

Man, on the threshold of setting foot on the Moon and busy planning the exploration of Mars and Venus, has never been so preoccupied with his own past.

Archaeologists are busy throughout the Near and Middle East and in parts of Africa, Italy and Scandinavia. Even in England the eminent Sir Mortimer Wheeler has a 'dig' at Yeovil, Somerset, which he believes to be the site of King Arthur's castle.

Nearer home, important finds have recently been made on Galiano Island.

All this incessant delving is reflected in the unending stream of archaeological literature. And of the welter of freshly-minted knowledge none is more fascinating than the pinpointing of Vinland in northern Newfoundland.

Last December, in The Islander, I reviewed Farley Mowat's Westviking which traced the voyage from Norway to Iceland of Eric the Red, and the discovery and colonization of Greenland and subsequent discovery of North America by his son, Lief Erikson.

Land Under the Pole Star, by Helge Ingstad, covers the same ground and, as far as Vinland is concerned, reaches the same conclusions.

Both books were written before the publication of the famous Yale map of Vinland which, together with subsequent archaeological confirmation, has finally put paid to poor old Christopher Columbus.

Farley Mowat, who confessed to being no specialist in the arcane field of Scandinavian scholarship, told the Viking story in novelist fashion, wisely relegating his supporting evidence to appendices.

The result was a fascinating tale brilliantly told and unencumbered by maddening quotations and footnotes. Westviking whetted my appetite for more detail, and this I have now found in Land Under the Pole Star.

Unfortunately, Ingstad, who deals with the same people as Mowat, has got so bogged down in excessive detail that he has missed the humanity that made Westviking so enthralling.

Ingstad, now 67, who has spent a great deal of his life as a Norwegian Arctic official, bases his conclusions on the Norse voyages and settlements on a combination of historical records, personal exploration, and deductions stemming from archaeological evidence.

His long and elaborately documented book alternates history with a voyage he made to Greenland in a small boat in the 1950s.

The aim of his leisurely journey, with his wife and a seaman friend, was to discover traces of old Norse settlements, to decipher old runic inscriptions, and generally to check out the ancient sagas against the facts.

Later (1961 to 1964), the indefatigable author explored the North American coast from Rhode Island to Labrador and marked what he considered ancient Norse home sites in northern Newfoundland at a place called L'Anse au Meadow.

That the air above us is poisoned to the extent of being a hazard to health is no longer open to argument. It is a fact of contemporary urban life, and first steps are under way, both on the federal and local level, to curb the degree of pollution. What is new, however, is the dawning recognition that pollution is growing faster than our attempts to control it. As recently as mid-June the United States secretary of health, education and welfare, John W. Gardner, admitted publicly that the problem was not only critical, but was "growing at a faster rate than our efforts to cope with it."

In other words, despite remedial measures, larger cities are gradually being submerged in an ocean of noxious air. This happens to be precisely the theme of this new book by two science writers from the New York area. They paint a frightening picture of the staggering rate of pollution in urban centres, and hold out the nightmarish possibility that some day in the not-too-distant future "we could run out of air."

This is not as far-fetched as it sounds. The air has a natural power to cleanse itself, but that power is gradually being overtaken by the demands being put on it in vast conurbations like New York and Los Angeles. Because the pollution process is growing faster than the cleansing process, the authors warn that "some of the densely packed communities will literally over load the air with poisons that cannot be

LAND UNDER THE POLE STAR, by Helge Ingstad; Macmillan; 348 Pages; $10.95.

Subsequent "digs" by archaeologists from five countries discovered remains of several large houses, one with five rooms, a large hall and a stone anvil, in addition to artifacts of indubitable Norse origin. Carbon tests date the finds at about 1,000 AD — the time when Lief Erikson and other Norsemen made their voyages to Vinland in the New World.

Ingstad handles this fascinating subject in academic fashion and achieves the remarkable feat of making most of it dull.

Like every other writer on this subject, he has sifted through masses of ancient writings and inscriptions and he insists on letting us know this, unlike the wily Mowat who tucked all the research stuff in the back of his book so as not to interfere with the narrative.

Ingstad analyzes the findings of early scientists, whose theses differ, ventures his own conclusions, and then consults other experts for their opinions on his reasoning. All of this is in tedious detail, with no stone, runic or otherwise, left unturned.

This is in no way meant as disparagement. Far from it. Helge Ingstad has done a remarkable job. His on-the-spot explorations have lent a new dimension to a subject mainly dealt with by scholars who never left the libraries. He has checked out the sagas and found them to be correct.

My quarrel with him is that he has presented so much material, and has documented it so well and so indigestibly, that he has made it difficult for laymen, unfamiliar with the subject, to experience the full thrill of reliving those stirring Norse times.

Even so, Land Under the Pole Star, is too full of interest to miss. I would counsel reading it after Westviking and before The Norse Atlantic Saga (by Gwyn Jones — Oxford University Press, 1964). After these three books you will be so hooked that you can start plowing through the hundreds of others on the same subject.

Just one point in conclusion. Where does this leave poor Columbus? Ingstad, who has an answer for everything has one for that too. "Columbus," he says, "visited Iceland about 1477, and it is only reasonable to suppose that he then learned of the northerly route to America."

The Deadly Air

removed for days or even weeks." At that point there may conceivably ensue "a shortage of breathable air."

This is not likely to occur next month or next year, but it could ultimately happen here, in support whereof the authors lay some chilling facts on the line. They maintain that industrial society has created a 3,000-mile corridor of contaminated air from the Pacific to the Atlantic that is "the greatest sewer on earth." Only the massive concentration of population in the Tokyo-Yokohama region of Japan can match it, and there a respiratory disease known as "Yokohama asthma" has already become endemic. In the United States pulmonary emphysema, a lung disease which makes breathing difficult, has jumped to more than million cases a year.

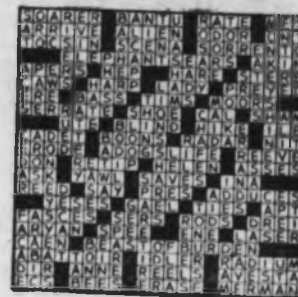

Because pollution is a silent, usually invisible enemy, its lethal presence is not always recognized. The authors lay the principal blame for pollution on automobile exhausts, industrial wastes, and the burning of refuse. Drastic control measures must be strictly enforced, even though "the polluter who spews his garbage into the air is always ready with an economic argument to justify his continued air-pollution operation."

As for Detroit, the authors fear that the automobile makers will do only enough to meet new regulations, and no more. Their book was, of course, written before Congress adopted its tough line on automobile safety. Detroit may be experiencing a change of heart, though one doubts it.

As matters now stand, every city in the United States with a population of 50,000 or more has a pollution problem, which means that two-thirds of this nation breathes poisoned air. If we don't act firmly and quickly, the book envisages the deadly consequences. "Some sunny day in November, perhaps 10 years from now, a huge dome of air will squash down over a third of the nation, its desultory winds lazily the pollutants back and forth over the cities. . . . The newspapers will report the hospitals crowded with asthma sufferers and the sudden epidemic of burning, tearing eyes. . . . Then the first deaths will occur. . . ."

Stealing a great painting or piece of sculpture is a profitless enterprise. Art may be easy enough to steal, but what are you going to do with it? You can't sell it because it's hot merchandise. You can't keep it because its presence is a constant source of danger. So what do you do? You usually give it back. Frustrating, isn't it?

Milton Esterow has written a book about some of the better-known art thefts of modern times, plus a few not so well known. The stories themselves are entertaining, though one could have wished for a narrative cast in less pedestrian prose.

The most notorious art theft ever recorded was, of course, that of the Mona Lisa from the Louvre in Paris by an Italian who thought, patriotically but mistakenly, that it ought to go back to Italy. So he took it back himself. It's a bizarre episode which has often been told before, but Esterow has gone back to the original court records. "Did you expect a reward from the Italian government?" the court asked. "Certainly," replied the thief. "I heard talk of millions." In fact the misguided fellow actually tried to sell his red-hot masterpiece, but, as Mark Twain once pointed out, it may be easy to steal a white elephant, but how hard it is to get rid of it.

A good many of the stories in the book end the same way. The thief, having failed to dispose of the stolen paintings, becomes nervous and ultimately sends anonymous word to the police as to their whereabouts. The most recent example was the theft of the Goya portrait of Wellington, which disappeared from London's National Gallery in 1961. Every few months the thief would send anonymous requests for ransom, each more urgent than the last. A year ago unable to live with his celebrated booty any longer, he returned it and gave himself up.

The one fortunate circumstance in these thefts is that the thieves almost never can bring themselves to destroy or damage a famous work of art. Some, indeed, are impecunious art lovers who desire nothing more than to live in esthetic bids with the purloined beauty on their walls. Esterow tells of one such who stole a small Rodin bronze from a dealer, savored it exquisitely for a few months, then courteously returned it to the dealer with a small cheque in appreciation.

Because artworks have become prime status symbols in our age of affluence, art thefts are more numerous now than ever before. Esterow cites a New York art dealer who put it more prosaically: "Pictures didn't become expensive—money became cheap." Which leads one to wonder why more art-owners don't insure for the full value of their paintings. I knew of one New York owner of a fine Caravaggio recently deceased, who refused to insure it because, though he owned the painting, he felt he couldn't afford the insurance premiums. The reasoning escaped me.

Why do thieves steal famous paintings? Esterow consulted a few psychiatrists, who gave him characteristically esoteric reasons. "It's a father-substitute," said one. "It's a symbolic castration," said another. The explanation is probably much simpler—the mistaken notion that such paintings can be sold for money. They can't. Hereafter, if would-be art thieves take the trouble to read this book, they will realize the game isn't worth the canvas.

Victoria Man Edited Book by Northwest Poets

A well-selected and beautifully-produced volume containing work by five talented poets . . . Kenneth O. Hanson, Richard Hugo, Carolyn Kizer, William Stafford and David Wagoner, is a fair description of Five Poets of the Pacific Northwest. The book, edited by Robin Skelton, with drawings by Carl Morris, is published by the University of Washington Press.

Today, a little more than one year after publication date, this book of poetry has sold out its first edition and has gone into a second printing. In a time when few publishers undertake the publication of poetry, that the book has become a best seller is indeed news.

west is dedicated to the memory of Theodore Roethke, as a tribute to the late poet's profound influence on a whole generation of poets and students at the University of Washington.

Poets of the Pacific Northwest living in an area of immense natural and cultural variety, do not conform to any one pattern. . . . Roethke set them an example, urged them to experimentation and exploration, as a teacher, emphasized the importance of attention to detail, syntax, punctuation and controlled prosody and gave his pupils fresh insights into the fundamentals of the poetic craft. . . . It is an admirable little volume, artistic in format, fully informative as to the identity of the poets represented and selective in the choice of their works.

Gastronomic Works Of Excellence

GODS, MEN AND WINE, by William Younger; World Publishing Co.; $19.75. THE COMMON SENSE OF WINE, by Andre L. Simon. World Publishing Co.; $7.50.

These are the first two volumes in a most commendable enterprise—the publication by Britain's Food and Wine Society of gastronomic works of excellence. The series holds every promise of delighting the many readers who now avidly devour books on food and wine. The two initial titles could hardly have been bettered. Gods, Men and Wine, completed by William Younger just before his death in 1961, is a history of wine from its beginning in the Sumerian era down to our time. "Wine has an animal life—sometimes even an animal life of splendor," begins Younger, and devotes the rest of his substantial volume to establishing that premise. For this edition a chapter has been added on Drinking in America, which pays tribute to the fine wines now being produced in this country. The companion volume by Andre Simon, founder of the Society, pitifully describes the wines of the world, their quality, how and when they should be drunk, and so on. Between them these two books give the series an auspicious send-off. — J.B.

very well. The two boys were Gay and Bowen, and yes, it had been Gay who had instigated the sailing project, and had steered, while the rest of us struggled to keep the blanket aloft.

She went on to say that I might not be able to reach Gay, who could be holidaying with his wife in their lakeside log cabin some 45 miles from Edmonton.

As it happens, however, my letter to Gay caught him just in time, and he took the trouble to answer immediately, although in something of a rush. He could indeed add to our various memories of the little camp in the wilderness. The boat, said he, was a 16-foot double-ender purchased by his father from a descendant of Sir James Douglas. It was a very fine rowboat, Gay recalled, so it was lucky we didn't smash it up on the rocks! Also, in a recent conversation with Leila on the subject of the camp during a visit of hers to Edmonton, he remembered that the night the wind came up, the tent blew down on top of us!

What a peculiar thing memory is. I have no recollection of that at all.

So, that's the truth of the matter as nearly as all of us can dredge up from the buried leaves of many mental autumns. We took no pictures.

The moral? Oh yes—no matter how convinced you may be that you remember everything correctly, you can still be wrong!

I expect Mr. Justice Wootton must have run into THAT one pretty frequently!

continuing its service to the depleted population of Yale and district. The road north had been rebuilt and improved, but was all gravel with steep grades and hairpin turns. Gradually traffic increased through this highway artery as the northern country offered magnificent scenery and virgin hunting and fishing.

Seeing future possibilities, the provincial government mounted a huge road building program throughout the country. Blacktop had priority and a new super highway was pushed past Yale to finally connect with the American-Canadian-built Alaska highway. Much of the work through the Fraser Canyon ran as high as $1½ million a mile.

Then a new and far greater gold rush streamed past the church which had witnessed so much of the historic growth of the province. Thousands of tourists poured into the province and jammed the new highways. The great monsters of the freeways, loaded with merchandise and goods of all sort growled their way north night and day supplying the needs of expanding communities. Before long tourism was the second-largest industry in British Columbia.

But the people of Yale, as they have for more than 100 years, put on their best and attended services at their church each Sunday. History had been made and was still being made but the church had not changed.

It stood in its quiet background of green trees serving the religious needs of its parishioners through the long transition period from the pioneer gold rush days to the high speed dynamic present-day society.

It is! Very rough!

Story and Pictures By BERT BINNY

It is, perhaps, true enough to say that many of the least considered appurtenances of this world, are, in reality, very interesting. Beneath a tough shell of insignificance, they so frequently conceal romance, beauty and even jollity.

Very often there is substantial consequence to the question of where we would be without what we take for granted.

Roads are a case in point. Of course, in these giddy, headlong days of ever-increasing traffic, they do get in the news every once in a while with thunderous demands for overpasses or underpasses, vehement condemnation of their condition or exciting guessing games as to the location of a new one. As an example, I have heard that there is presently a brisk bout of conjecture going on as to the route of a new—or partially new—Patricia Bay Highway.

This, I further understand, is to eliminate the Elk Lake "bottleneck." Even allowing that such a bottleneck exists, I remain at a loss to appreciate the necessity for traversing the ground to or from the airport or the ferry at supersonic speed for the entire distance.

The lake is one of our scenic attractions so that it seems a pity to whizz past it as if it were a peculiarly pungent garbage dump.

All this brings up the far deeper question of whether speed and progress are necessarily synonymous or even closely related.

Personally, I don't think they are and I remember the Chinese—not Confucius this time—who wondered what people do with the minutes they have elaborately saved? He had something there!

Anyway, let's leave metaphysics to such as Aristotle and get back to roads.

Duke, the saddlehorse, and I found a new road a week or two ago. Actually, to accord credit where credit is due, it was Duke who found the road. I took no few wrong turnings but he always returned me whence we had started though I suspect that he became somewhat cheesed off at the number of—to him—futile excursions through the brush to nowhere and back again. Indeed, we eventually finished on private property; caught redhanded committing trespass, but we did secure all the information we needed to discover where we should have been.

necessarily synonymous or even closely related?

The road in question is really the extension of one already in existence. It links Interurban with Prospect Lake Road and the name is Viaduct Avenue. It saves quite a bit if you happen to be going in the direction of Francis Park or Thetis Lake from Saanich. To use the old, rather picturesque expression, you don't have to "fetch a compass" around Goward or Prospect Lake Roads.

But, please, don't dash out there in your new Rolls-Royce or Cadillac, your reconditioned Pierce-Arrow or, indeed, your wheeziest old clunker. None of them will make it through.

When I say there is a road, I am perfectly right. But I never uttered a syllable about a finished road; finish is loosely predicted for about two years hence.

At the point where Viaduct Avenue joins Interurban there is a sign which says: No Through Road. As already pointed out this is virtually correct. Pedestrians, tanks and most animals can make it: not comfortably, but they can win through.

Where the extension joins the existing avenue there is another sign which included in its legend one of the most masterly understatements of all time. The road, it warns, "may be rough." It is! Very rough! It offers dirt piles and rock piles of forbidding proportions. It has soft spots and hard spots, bumps and depressions. The surface often has roots sticking out of it like a week-old growth of beard on an unshaven jowl.

Of course, that very polite sign may have only temporal significance? It may convey that, during construction, you can expect anything but, as far as Duke and I were concerned, our expectations were exceeded beyond our wildest imagination.

A little further along the extension is another sign. Here an undercurrent of something akin to sheer desperation is noticeable. It is as if the authorities, realizing that the road is impassable and that the milk-and-water tone of their first sign may not have discouraged adventurous motorists, have now ceased absolutely to mince words. Without the slightest equivocation they announce bluntly: No Through Road. And, worse yet; No Turning Space. Now it has become a case of each for himself and devil take the hindmost.

Viaduct Avenue or, at any rate, the extension thereof is intriguing simply because it can easily be lost. There are numerous blind-alleys and false trails and that elusive thoroughfare itself is subtly concealed beneath the aforementioned dirt and rock piles. It all suggests adventure, exploration and possibly even discovery. Not, perhaps, the discovery of a Tutankhamen, a Dr. Livingstone or even a dinosaur egg, but something patently outside the Pale of everyday existence.

Roads, however, are interesting in themselves. They attract literary folk like honey draws bees. John Bartlett and his worthy successor, Christopher Morley, provide no fewer than 68 quotations employing the word, road. Remembering that Viaduct is an Avenue, it is perhaps disappointing to find these same gents with only a single reference to Avenues. They must have slipped up. What about the great Gracie Fields with her "Our avenue is a nice avenue, 'Ave a noo 'ouse down our avenue!" Classics like this are surely for posterity?

But, somewhat less whimsically and when we come to the roads, the poets have dealt with, among many others, the Uxbridge Road, the Road to the Isles, the Road to Mandalay, the Road of Gratitude in Samoa, the Road that leads to Corinth, the right road to Ireland, the open road, the apple road, the rolling road, the grand roads and the little roads. Both Sam Foss and William Alexander Pope fancied a house by the side of the road where they would sit and be a friend of man. The old road to Paradise is also dealt with by a rather occult writer named Margaret Widdemer. The road in the opposite direction is, according to Karl Marx, Will James and Dr. Johnson, paved with good intentions: Philip Bailey felt it needed mending.

Nor should we forget the High Road and the Low Road of the immortal Scottish Ballad, Loch Lomond, even though the true interpretation of High and Low, more often than not, completely eludes those using it.

Ah, yes! Roads in one form or another are, along with love, the moon and the sea, staunch poetic standbys. It is conceivable that Viaduct—when finished—may be lyrically committed to posterity also.

I like Viaduct Avenue the way it is and, provided no great changes are in contemplation, the way it will be on completion. It has birds which sing, flowers which bloom and a forest canopy.

If it is "a path that wandereth," who cares? A little longer contact and association with natural things never did anyone any harm at all.
